President Johnson's Inaugural Address Expounds Personal Philosophy, Outlines 'Great Society'

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 20, 1965, Inaugural Address, delivered on the steps of the Capitol following his swearing-in as President:

My fellow countrymen: On this occasion, the oath I have taken before you and before God, is not mine alone, but ours together. We are one nation and one people. Our fate as a nation and our future as a people rest not upon one citizen but upon all citizens.

That is the majesty and the meaning of this moment.

For every generation, there is a destiny. For some, history decides. For this generation, the choice must be our own.

Even now, a rocket moves toward Mars. It reminds us that the world will not be the same for our children, or even for ourselves in a short span of years. The next man to stand here will look out on a scene that is different from our own, because ours is a time of change -- rapid and fantastic change -- baring the secrets of nature -- multiplying the nations -- placing in uncertain hands new weapons for mastery and destruction -- shaking old values and uprooting old ways.

Our destiny in the midst of change will rest on the unchanged character of our people and on their faith.

They came here -- the exile and the stranger, brave but frightened -- to find a place where a man could be his own man. They made a covenant with this land. Conceived in justice, written in liberty, bound in union, it was meant one day to inspire the hopes of all mankind, and it binds us still. If we keep its terms we shall flourish.

JUSTICE

First, justice was the promise that all who made the journey would share in the fruits of the land.

In a land of great wealth, families must not live in hopeless poverty.

In a land rich in harvest, children just must not go hungry.

In a land of healing miracles, neighbors must not suffer and die untended.

In a great land of learning and scholars, young people must be taught to read and write.

For more than thirty years that I have served this nation, I have believed that this injustice to our people, this waste of our resources, was our real enemy. For thirty years or more, with the resources I have had, I have vigilantly fought against it. I have learned and I know that it will not surrender easily.

But change has given us new weapons. Before this generation of Americans is finished, this enemy will not only retreat -- it will be conquered.

Justice requires us to remember: when any citizen denies his fellow, saying: His color is not mine or his beliefs are strange and different, in that moment he betrays America, though his forebears created this nation.

LIBERTY

Liberty was the second article of our covenant. It was self-government, it was our Bill of Rights. But it was more. America would be a place where each man could be proud to be himself: stretching his talents, rejoicing in his work, important in the life of his neighbors and his nation.

This has become more difficult in a world where change and growth seem to tower beyond the control and even the judgment of men. We must work to provide the knowledge and the surroundings which can enlarge the possibilities of every citizen.

The American covenant called on us to help show the way for the liberation of man, and that is our goal. Thus, if as a nation there is much outside our control, as a people no stranger is outside our hope.

Change has brought new meaning to that old mission. We can never again stand aside prideful in isolation. Terrific dangers and troubles that we once called "foreign" now constantly live among us. If American lives must end, and American treasure be spilled, in countries that we barely know, then that is the price that change has demanded of conviction and of our enduring covenant.

Think of our world as it looks from that rocket that is heading toward Mars. It is like a child's globe, hanging in space, the continent stuck to its side like colored maps. We are all fellow passengers on a dot of earth. And each of us, in the span of time, has really only a moment among our companions.

How incredible it is that in this fragile existence we should hate and destroy one another. There are possibilities enough for all who will abandon mastery over others to pursue mastery over nature. There is world enough for all to seek their happiness in their own way.

Our nation's course is abundantly clear. We aspire to nothing that belongs to others. We seek no dominion over our fellow man, but man's dominion over tyranny and misery.

But more is required. Men want to be part of a common enterprise -- a cause greater than themselves. And each of us must find a way to advance the purpose of the nation, thus finding new purpose for ourselves. Without this, we will simply become a nation of strangers.

UNION

The third article is union. To those who were small and few against the wilderness, the success of liberty demanded the strength of the union. Two centuries of change have made this true again.

No longer need capitalist and worker, farmer and clerk, city and countryside, struggle to divide our bounty. By working shoulder to shoulder together we can increase the bounty of all.

We have discovered that every child who learns, and every man who finds work, and every sick body that is made whole -- like a candle added to an altar -- brightens the hope of all the faithful.

So let us reject any among us who seek to reopen old wounds and rekindle old hatreds. They stand in the way of a seeking nation.

Let us now join reason to faith and action to experience, to transform our unity of interest into a unity of purpose. For the hour and the day and the time are here to achieve progress without strife, to achieve change without hatred; not without difference of opinion but without the deep and abiding divisions which scar the union for generations.

Under this covenant of justice, liberty and union, we have become a nation; prosperous, great and mighty. And we have kept our freedom. But we have no promise from God that our greatness will endure.

We have been allowed by Him to seek greatness with the sweat of our hands and the strength of our spirit.

GREAT SOCIETY

I do not believe that the Great Society is the ordered, changeless, and sterile battalion of the ants.

It is the excitement of becoming -- always becoming, trying, probing, falling, resting, and trying again -- but always trying and always gaining.

In each generation -- with toil and tears -- we have had to earn our heritage again.

If we fail now, then we will have forgotten in abundance what we learned in hardship: that democracy rests on faith, that freedom asks more than it gives, and the judgment of God is harshest on those who are most favored.

If we succeed, it will not be because of what we have, but it will be because of what we are; not because of what we own, but rather because of what we believe.

For we are a nation of believers. Underneath the clamor of building and the rush of our day's pursuits, we are believers in justice and liberty and union. And in our own union we believe that every man must some day be free. And we believe in ourselves.

That is the mistake that our enemies have always made. In my lifetime -- in depression and in war -- they have awaited our defeat. Each time, from the secret places of the American heart, came forth the faith that they could not see or that they could not even imagine, and it brought us victory. And it will again.

For this is what America is all about. It is the uncrossed desert and the unclimbed ridge. It is the star that is not reached and the harvest that is sleeping in the unplowed ground.

Is our world gone? We say farewell. Is a new world coming? We welcome it -- and we will bend it to the hopes of man.

To these trusted public servants and to my family, and those close friends of mine who have followed me down a long winding road, and to all the people of this union and the world -- I will repeat today what I said on that sorrowful day in November last year: I will lead and I will do the best I can.

But you, you must look within your own hearts to the old promises and to the old dreams. They will lead you best of all.

For myself, I ask only in the words of an ancient leader: "Give me now wisdom and knowledge that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this, thy people, that is so great?"

PRESIDENT FINDS STATE OF THE UNION 'FREE, RESTLESS, GROWING AND FULL OF HOPE'

Following is the complete transcript of President Johnson's State of the Union Message, delivered in person to a joint session of the House and Senate Jan. 4, 1965:

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, Members of the Congress, My Fellow Americans:

On this Hill which was my home, I am stirred by old friendships. Though total agreement between the Executive and the Congress is impossible, I am proud to be among my colleagues of the Congress whose legacy to their trust is their loyalty to their nation. I am not unaware of the inner emotions of the new members of this body tonight. Twenty-eight years ago I felt as you do now. You will soon learn that you are among men whose first love is their country. Men who try each day to do as best they can what they believe is right.

We are entering the third century of the pursuit of American union.

Two hundred years ago, in 1765, nine assembled colonies first joined together to demand freedom from arbitrary power. For the first century we struggled to hold together the first continental union of democracy in the history of man. One hundred years ago, in 1865, following a terrible test of blood and fire, the compact of union was finally sealed.

For a second century we labored to establish a unity of purpose and interest among the many groups which make up the American community. That struggle has often brought pain and violence. It is not yet over. But we have achieved a unity of interest among our people that is unmatched in the history of freedom.

And so tonight now, in 1965, we begin a new quest for union. We seek the unity of man with the world that he has built -- with the knowledge that can save or destroy him -- with the cities which can stimulate or stifle him -- with the wealth and machines which can enrich or menace his spirit. We seek to establish a harmony between man and society which will allow each of us to enlarge the meaning of his life and all of us to elevate the quality of our civilization. This is the search that we begin tonight.

But the unity we seek cannot realize its full promise in isolation. For today the state of the union depends, in large measure, upon the state of the world. Our concern and interest, compassion and vigilance, extend to every corner of a dwindling planet.

Yet, it is not merely our concern but the concern of all free men. We will not, and we should not, assume that it is the task of Americans alone to settle all the conflicts of a torn and troubled world. Let the foes of freedom take no comfort from this. For in concert with other nations, we shall help men defend their freedom.

Our first aim remains the safety and the well-being of our own country. We are prepared to live as good neighbors with all, but we cannot be indifferent to acts designed to injure our interests, or our citizens, or our establishments abroad. The community of nations requires mutual respect. We shall extend it -- and we shall expect it.

In our relations with the world we shall follow the example of Andrew Jackson who said: "I intend to ask for nothing that is not clearly right and to submit to nothing that is wrong." And he promised, that "the honor of my country shall never be stained by an apology from me for the statement of truth or for the performance of duty." That was this nation's policy in the 1830s and that is this nation's policy in the 1960s.

Our own freedom and growth have never been the final goal of the American dream. We were never meant to be an oasis of liberty and abundance in a worldwide desert of disappointed dreams. Our nation was created to help strike away the chains of ignorance and misery and tyranny wherever they keep man less than God means him to be.

We are moving toward that destiny, never more rapidly than we have moved in the last four years.

In this period we have built a military power strong enough to meet any threat and destroy any adversary. And that superiority will continue to grow so long as this office is mine -- and you sit on Capitol Hill.

In this period no new nation has become Communist and the unity of the Communist empire has begun to crumble.

In this period we have resolved in friendship our disputes with our neighbors of the hemisphere, and joined in an Alliance for Progress toward economic growth and political democracy.

In this period we have taken more steps toward peace -- including the test ban treaty -- than at any time since the cold war began.

In this period we have relentlessly pursued our advances toward the conquest of space.

Most important of all, in this period, the United States has re-emerged into the fullness of its self-confidence and purpose. No longer are we called upon to get America moving. We are moving. No longer do we doubt our strength or resolution. We are strong and we have proven our resolve.

No longer can anyone wonder whether we are in the grip of historical decay. We know that history is ours to make. And if there is great danger, there is now also the excitement of great expectations.

Yet we still live in a troubled and perilous world. There is no longer a single threat. There are many. They differ in intensity and in danger. They require different attitudes and different answers.

RELATIONS WITH COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

With the Soviet Union we seek peaceful understandings that can lessen the danger to freedom. Last fall I asked the American people to choose that course. I will carry forward their command. If we are to live together in peace, we must come to know each other better.

I am sure that the American people would welcome a chance to listen to the Soviet leaders on our television -- as I would like the Soviet people to hear our leaders on theirs.

I hope the new Soviet leaders can visit America so they can learn about our country at first hand.

In Eastern Europe restless nations are slowly beginning to assert their identity. Your government, assisted by leaders in labor and business, is now exploring ways to increase peaceful trade with these countries and with the Soviet Union. I will report our conclusions to the Congress.

VIET NAM

In Asia, Communism wears a more aggressive face. We see that in Viet Nam. Why are we there?

We are there, first, because a friendly nation has asked us for help against the Communist aggression. Ten years ago our President pledged our help. Three Presidents have supported that pledge. We will not break it now.

Second, our own security is tied to the peace of Asia. Twice in one generation we have had to fight against aggression in the Far East. To ignore aggression now would only increase the danger of a much larger war.

Our goal is peace in Southeast Asia. That will come only when aggressors leave their neighbors in peace. What is at stake is the cause of freedom, and in that cause America will never be found wanting.

But Communism is not the only source of trouble and unrest. There are older and deeper sources -- in the misery of nations and in man's irrepressible ambition for liberty and a better life.

LATIN AMERICA

With the free Republics of Latin America I have always felt -- and our country has always felt -- very special ties of interest and affection. It will be the purpose of my Administration to strengthen these ties. Together we share and shape the destiny of the new world. In the coming year I hope to pay a visit to Latin America. And I will steadily enlarge our commitment to the Alliance for Progress as the instrument of our war against poverty and injustice in the hemisphere.

EUROPE

In the Atlantic community we continue to pursue our goal of twenty years -- a Europe that is growing in strength, unity, and cooperation with America. A great unfinished task is the reunification of Germany through self-determination.

This European policy is not based on any abstract design. It is based on the realities of common interests and common values, common dangers and common expectations. These realities will continue to have their way -- especially in our expanding trade and especially in our common defense.

Free Americans have shaped the policies of the United States. And because we know these realities, those policies have been, and will be, in the interest of Europe. Free Europeans must shape the course of Europe. And, for the same reasons, that course has been, and will be, in our interest and in the interest of freedom.

I found this truth confirmed in my talks with European leaders in the last year. I hope to repay these visits to some of our friends in Europe this year.

AFRICA, ASIA

In Africa and Asia we are witnessing the turbulent unfolding of new nations and continents. We welcome them to the society of nations.

We are committed to help those seeking to strengthen their own independence, and to work most closely with those governments dedicated to the welfare of all their people. We seek not fidelity to an iron faith, but a diversity of belief as varied as man himself. We seek not to extend the power of America but the progress of humanity. We seek not to dominate others but to strengthen the freedom of all people.

I will seek new ways to use our knowledge to help deal with the explosion in world population and the growing scarcity in world resources.

UNITED NATIONS

Finally, we renew our commitment to the continued growth and effectiveness of the United Nations. The frustrations of the United Nations are a product of the world that we live in and not of the institution which gives them voice. It is far better to throw these differences open to the assembly of nations than to permit them to fester in silent danger.

These are some of the goals of the American nation in the world in which we live. For ourselves we seek neither praise nor blame, neither gratitude nor obedience. We seek peace. We seek freedom. We seek to enrich the life of man. For that is the world in which we will flourish and that is the world that we mean for all men to ultimately have.

World affairs will continue to call upon our energy and courage. But today we can turn increased attention to the character of American life.

We are in the midst of the greatest upward surge of economic well-being in the history of any nation.

Our flourishing progress has been marked by price stability that is unequalled in the world. Our balance of payments deficit has declined and the soundness of our dollar is unquestioned. I pledge to keep it that way and I urge business and labor to cooperate to that end.

GREAT SOCIETY

We worked for two centuries to climb this peak of prosperity. But we are only at the beginning of the road to the Great Society. Ahead now is a summit where freedom from the wants of the body can help fulfill the needs of the spirit.

We built this nation to serve its people. We want to grow and build and create, but we want progress to be the servant and not the master of man.

We do not intend to live in the midst of abundance, isolated from neighbors and nature, confined by blighted cities and bleak suburbs, stunted by a poverty of learning and an emptiness of leisure.

The Great Society asks not only how much, but how good; not only how to create wealth but how to use it; not only how fast we are going, but where we are headed. It proposes as the first test for a nation: the quality of its people.

This kind of society will not flower spontaneously from swelling riches and surging power. It will not be the gift of government or the creation of Presidents. It will require of every American, for many generations, both faith in the destination and the fortitude to make the journey, and like freedom itself, it will always be challenge and not fulfillment. Tonight we accept that challenge.

I propose that we begin a program in education to ensure every American child the fullest development of his mind and skills.

I propose we begin a massive attack on crippling and killing diseases.

I propose we launch a national effort to make the American city a better and more stimulating place to live.

I propose we increase the beauty of America and end the poisoning of our rivers and the air that we breathe.

I propose we carry out a new program to develop regions of our country that are now suffering from distress and depression.

I propose we make new efforts to control and prevent crime and delinquency.

I propose we eliminate every remaining obstacle to the right and the opportunity to vote.

I propose we honor and support the achievements of thought and the creations of art.

I propose that we make an all-out campaign against waste and inefficiency.

Our basic task is three-fold: First, to keep our economy growing; to open for all Americans the opportunity that is now enjoyed by most Americans; and to improve the quality of life for all.

In the next six weeks I will submit special messages with detailed proposals for national action in each of these areas. Tonight I would like briefly to explain some of my major recommendations in the three main areas of national need.

ECONOMIC POLICIES

First, we must keep our nation prosperous. We seek full employment opportunity for every American citizen.

I will present a budget designed to move the economy forward. More money will be left in the hands of the consumer by a substantial cut in excise taxes. We will continue along the path toward a balanced budget in a balanced economy.

I confidently predict -- what every economic sign tells us tonight -- the continued flourishing of the American economy.

But we must remember that fear of a recession can contribute to the fact of a recession. The knowledge that our government will, and can, move swiftly will strengthen the confidence of investors and business.

Congress can reinforce this confidence by ensuring that its procedures permit rapid action on temporary income tax cuts. And special funds for job-creating public programs should be made available for immediate use if recession threatens.

Our continued prosperity demands continued price stability. Business, labor and the consumer all have a high stake in keeping wages and prices within the framework of the guideposts that have already served the nation so well.

Finding new markets abroad for our goods depends on the initiative of American business. But we stand ready -- with credit and other help -- to assist the flow of trade which will benefit the entire nation.

FARM

Our economy owes much to the efficiency of our farmers. We must continue to assure them the opportunity to earn a fair reward. I have instructed the Secretary of Agriculture to lead a major effort to find new approaches to reduce the heavy cost of our farm programs and to direct more of our effort to the small farmer who needs help most.

LABOR

We can help ensure continued prosperity through a Regional Recovery Program to assist the development of stricken areas left behind by our national progress; further efforts to provide our workers with the skills demanded by modern technology, for the laboring man is an indispensable force in the American system; the extension of the minimum wage to more than two million unprotected workers; the improvement and modernization of the unemployment compensation system. And as pledged in our 1960 and 1964 Democratic platforms, I will propose to Congress changes in the Taft-Hartley Act including Section 14-B. I will do so hoping to reduce conflicts that for several years have divided Americans in various states of our union.

TRANSPORTATION

In a country that spans a continent modern transportation is vital to continued growth. I will recommend heavier reliance on competition in transportation and a new policy for our merchant marine. I will ask for funds to study high-speed rail transportation between urban centers. We will begin with test projects between Boston and Washington. On high-speed trains, passengers could travel this distance in less than four hours.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

Second, we must open opportunity to all our people. Most Americans tonight enjoy a good life. But far too many are still trapped in poverty, idleness and fear.

Let a just nation throw open to them the city of promise: to the elderly, by providing hospital care under Social Security and by raising benefit payments to those struggling to maintain the dignity of their later years; to the poor, through doubling the war against poverty this year; to Negro Americans, through enforcement of the civil rights law and elimination of barriers to the right to vote; to those in other lands that are seeking the promise of America, through an immigration law based on the work a man can do and not where he was born or how he spells his name.

EDUCATION

Our third goal is to improve the quality of American life. We begin with learning. Every child must have the best education that this nation can provide. Thomas Jefferson said no nation can be both ignorant and free. Today no nation can be both ignorant and great.

In addition to our existing programs, I will recommend a new program for schools and students with a first year authorization of one billion, 500 million dollars. It will help at every stage along the road to learning.

For the pre-school years we will help needy children become aware of the excitement of learning.

For the primary and secondary school years we will aid public schools serving low-income families and assist students in both public and private schools.

For the college years we will provide scholarships to high school students of the greatest promise and greatest need and guaranteed low-interest loans to students continuing their college studies.

New laboratories and centers will help our schools lift their standards of excellence and explore new methods of teaching. These centers will provide special training for those who need and those who deserve special treatment.

HEALTH

Greatness requires not only an educated people but a healthy people. Our goal is to match the achievements of our medicine to the afflictions of our people.

We already carry on a large program for research and health. In addition, regional medical centers can provide the most advanced diagnosis and treatment for heart disease, cancer, stroke, and other major diseases.

New support for medical and dental education will provide the trained men to apply our knowledge.

Community centers can help the mentally ill and improve health care for school-age children from poor families, including services for the mentally retarded.

URBAN DEVELOPMENT

An educated and healthy people require surroundings in harmony with their hopes.

In our urban areas the central problem today is to protect and restore man's satisfaction in belonging to a community where he can find security and significance.

The first step is to break old patterns -- to begin to think and work and plan for the development of entire metropolitan areas. We will take this step with new programs of help for basic community facilities and for neighborhood centers of health and recreation. New and existing programs will be open to those cities which work together to develop unified long-range policies for metropolitan areas.

We must also make important changes in our housing programs if we are to pursue these same basic goals. So a Department of Housing and Urban Development will be needed to spearhead this effort in our cities.

CRIME

Every citizen has the right to feel secure in his home and on the streets of his community. To help control crime we will recommend programs to train local law enforcement officers; to put the best techniques of modern science at their disposal; to discover the causes of crime and better ways to prevent it.

I will soon assemble a panel of outstanding experts of this nation to search out answers to the national problem of crime and delinquency, and I welcome the recommendations and the constructive efforts of the Congress.

NATURAL BEAUTY

For over three centuries the beauty of America has sustained our spirit and enlarged our vision. We must act now to protect this heritage. In a fruitful new partnership with the states and cities the next decade should be a conservation milestone. We must make a massive effort to save the countryside and establish

-- as a green legacy for tomorrow -- more large and small parks, more seashores and open spaces than have been created during any period in our history.

A new and substantial effort must be made to landscape highways and provide places of relaxation and recreation wherever our roads run.

Within our cities imaginative programs are needed to landscape streets and transform open areas into places of beauty and recreation.

AIR AND WATER POLLUTION

We will seek legal power to prevent pollution of our air and water before it happens. We will step up our effort to control harmful wastes, giving first priority to the cleanup of our most contaminated rivers. We will increase research to learn more about control of pollution.

We hope to make the Potomac a model of beauty here in the Capital, and preserve unspoiled stretches of some of our waterways with a Wild Rivers bill.

More ideas for a beautiful America will emerge from a White House Conference on Natural Beauty which I will soon call.

THE ARTS AND SCIENCES

We must also recognize and encourage those who can be pathfinders for the nation's imagination and understanding.

To help promote and honor creative achievements, I will propose a National Foundation on the Arts.

To develop knowledge which will enrich our lives and ensure our progress, I will recommend programs to encourage basic science, particularly in the universities -- and to bring closer the day when the oceans will supply our growing need for fresh water.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION, EFFICIENCY

For government to serve these goals it must be modern in structure, efficient in action, and ready for any emergency. I am busy currently reviewing the structure of the Executive Branch of this government. I hope to reshape it and reorganize it to meet more effectively the tasks of the 20th Century.

Wherever waste is found, I will eliminate it. Last year we saved almost three billion, five-hundred million dollars by eliminating waste in the government. And I intend to do better this year. And very soon I will report to you on our progress and on new economies that your government plans to make.

Even the best of government is subject to the worst of hazards. I will propose laws to ensure the necessary continuity of leadership should the President become disabled or die.

In addition, I will propose reforms in the Electoral College -- leaving undisturbed the vote by states -- but making sure no elector can substitute his will for that of the people.

THE PRESIDENCY

Last year in a sad moment I came here and I spoke to you after 33 years of public service, practically all of them here on this Hill. This year I speak after one year as President of the United States.

Many of you in this chamber are among my oldest friends. We have shared many happy moments and many hours of work, and we have watched many Presidents together. Yet, only in the White House can you finally know the full weight of this office. The greatest burden is not running the huge operations of government -- or meeting daily troubles, large and small -- or even working with the Congress. A President's hardest task is not to do what is right, but to know what is right.

Yet the Presidency brings no special gift of prophecy or foresight. You take an oath, step into an office, and you must then help guide a great democracy. The answer was waiting for me in the land where I was born. It was once barren land. The angular hills were covered with scrub cedar and a few large live oaks. Little would grow in the harsh caliche soil of my country. And each spring the Pedernales River would flood our valley.

But men came and they worked and they endured and they built. And tonight that country is abundant; abundant with fruit and cattle and goats and sheep, and there are pleasant homes and lakes and the floods are gone.

Why did men come to that once forbidding land? They were restless, of course, and they had to be moving on. But there was more than that. There was a dream -- a dream of a place where a free man could build for himself, and raise his children to a better life — a dream of a continent to be conquered, a world to be won, a nation to be made.

Remembering this, I knew the anwer.

A President does not shape a new and personal vision of America. He collects it from the scattered hopes of the American past.

It existed when the first settlers saw the coast of a new world, and when the first pioneers moved westward.

It has guided us every step of the way.

It sustains every President. But it is also your inheritance and it belongs equally to all the people that we all serve.

It must be interpreted anew by each generation for its own needs; as I have tried, in part, to do tonight.

It shall lead us as we enter this third century of the search for "a more perfect union."

This, then, is the state of the union: Free, restless, growing and full of hope.

So it was in the beginning.

So it shall always be, while God is willing, and we are strong enough to keep the faith.

ARTS AND HUMANITIES

Following is the complete text of a March 10 statement by President Johnson on his proposal for a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities:

At the request of the Subcommittee Chairmen, I have today transmitted the Administration's recommendations for a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities to the Special Subcommittee on Labor of the House of Representatives, and the Special Subcommittee on Arts and Humanities of the Senate.

In the State of the Union address I said "We must also recognize and encourage those who can be pathfinders for the nation's imagination and understanding."

These recommendations are designed to secure such recognition and encouragement for those who extend the frontiers of understanding in the arts and in humanistic studies.

The humanities are an effort to explore the nature of man's culture and to deepen understanding of the sources and goals of human activity. Our recommendations recognize this effort as a central part of the American national purpose, and provide modest support to those whose work offers promise of extending the boundaries of understanding.

Pursuit of artistic achievement, and making the fruits of that achievement available to all its people, is also among the hallmarks of a Great Society.

We fully recognize that no government can call artistic excellence into existence. It must flow from the quality of the society and the good fortune of the nation. Nor should any government seek to restrict the freedom of the artist to pursue his calling in his own way. Freedom is an essential condition for the artist, and in proportion as freedom is diminished so is the prospect of artistic achievement.

But government can seek to create conditions under which the arts can flourish; through recognition of achievements, through helping those who seek to enlarge creative understanding, through increasing the access of our people to the works of our artists, and through recognizing the arts as part of the pursuit of American greatness.

That is the goal of this legislation.

In so doing we follow the example of many other nations where government sympathy and support have helped to shape great and influential artistic traditions.

This Congress will consider many programs which will leave an enduring mark on American life. But it may well be that passage of this legislation, modest as it is, will help secure for this Congress a sure and honored place in the story of the advance of our civilization.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S JAN. 25 BUDGET MESSAGE

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 25 message to Congress on the Budget:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am presenting to you today the budget of the United States for the fiscal year 1966.

A budget is a plan of action. It defines our goals, charts our courses, and outlines our expectations. It reflects hard decisions and difficult choices. This budget is no exception.

It is a budget of priorities. It provides for what we must do, but not for all we would like to do.

It is a budget of both opportunity and sacrifice. It begins to grasp the opportunities of the Great Society. It is restrained by the sacrifices we must continue to make in order to keep our defenses strong and flexible.

This budget provides reasonably for our needs. It is not extravagant. Neither is it miserly.

It stands on five basic principles:

- Government fiscal policies must promote national strength, economic progress, and individual opportunity.
- Our tax system must continue to be made less burdensome, more equitable, and more conducive to continued economic expansion.
- The Great Society must be a bold society. It must not fear to meet new challenges. It must not fail to seize new opportunities.
- The Great Society must be a compassionate society. It must always be responsive to human needs.
- The Great Society must be an efficient society. Less urgent programs must give way to make room for higher priority needs. And each program, old and new, must be conducted with maximum efficiency, economy, and productivity.

The major features of the 1966 budget translate these principles into action.

First, excise taxes are substantially reduced. Social security benefits, including hospital insurance, are increased. These are combined with other expenditure increases to yield an overall fiscal policy designed to maintain our steady economic expansion.

Second, the budget supports a massive defense establishment of steadily growing power, within reduced outlays.

Third, our international and space programs are being advanced at a satisfactory rate, but with smaller increases than in earlier years.

Fourth, expanded programs and higher expenditures are proposed to:

- Provide better and more education for our children.
- Extend the war against poverty.
- Promote advances in the Nation's health.
- Improve conditions in the urban areas where most of us live.
- Help the Appalachian region lift itself out of its present depressed condition.
- Strengthen our social security protection.
- Increase economic opportunities in rural communities.
- Encourage sound use of our natural resources.
- Conserve natural beauty in our land.

Fifth, a large part of the funds for needed program expansion has come from savings, reductions, and economies in other parts of the budget.

FISCAL POLICY

This budget recognizes that a growing economy is needed to promote national strength and progress. It is also needed to move us toward a balanced budget. When the economy slows down, Federal revenues fall and spending tends to increase. The result is larger, not smaller, budget deficits.

Nearly 4 years ago, this Nation began its fourth postwar economic expansion. With the help of last year's income tax reduction—the largest and most comprehensive ever enacted—this expansion has already outlasted each of the previous three postwar recoveries.

During the past 4 years, the Nation's real output of goods and services—the gross national product—has grown at an average rate of about 5% per year.

New highs have been achieved in employment, income, and profits. Unemployment has been reduced. Price stability has been maintained.

This is a creditable record of achievement. And we look forward to continued growth in the year ahead. The Nation's output in calendar year 1965 is expected to reach $660 billion, plus or minus $5 billion.

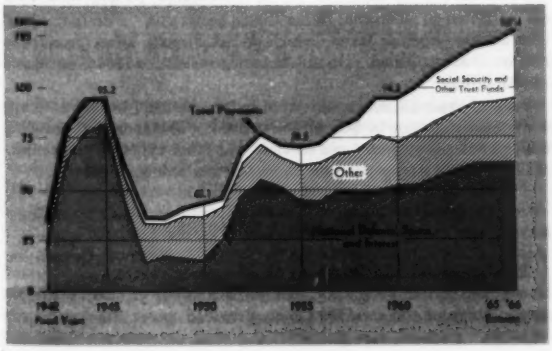
Nevertheless, we must keep in mind that our economy is still producing at a level well below its potential. Nearly 4 million people are out of work. The unemployment rate is still nearly 5%. Plants and machines are standing idle while human wants and needs go unmet. An estimated 35 million people continue to live in poverty.

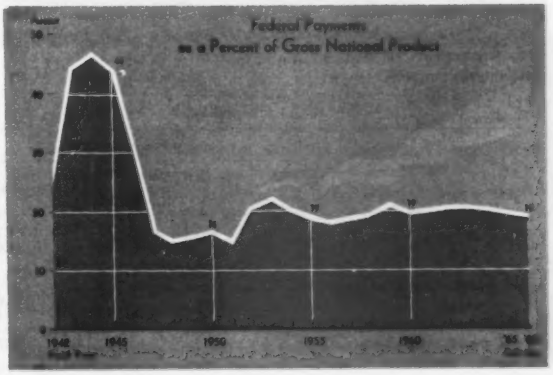
We cannot substitute last year's achievements for next year's goals; nor can we meet next year's challenge with last year's budget.

The revenue and expenditure proposals presented in the 1966 budget are carefully designed to promote continued economic expansion and improved economic opportunities.

This budget takes into account the need to reduce the Nation's balance of payments deficit. During the last calendar year, the deficit showed a significant decline. To help insure continued improvement, I will intensify efforts to carry out Federal activities with the least possible burden on our balance of payments.

Composition of Federal Payments





BUDGET SUMMARY

Administrative budget.—In preparing this budget, I have applied exacting tests of efficiency and necessity to all proposed expenditures. As a result, total administrative budget expenditures are being held to $99.7 billion in 1966. Although expenditures will rise by a relatively small amount, they will decline as a percent of the gross national product—to less than 15%, the lowest ratio achieved in 15 years.

Administrative budget receipts are expected to increase in 1966 to $94.4 billion. This is $3.2 billion over the estimated level for 1965. This increase reflects the economic growth anticipated in calendar year 1965. It also takes into account the revenue losses from proposed excise tax changes and from the second stage of income tax cuts enacted last year.

The resulting 1966 administrative budget deficit of $5.3 billion is $1 billion lower than the 1965 deficit, marking continued progress toward a balanced budget.

As our population increases, as science and technology change our methods of doing things, as our wants multiply with the growth in our incomes, and as urbanization creates new problems, there is growing need for more public and private services. It is evident that unless defense needs should decline substantially, Government expenditures will continue to rise over the long run.

At the same time, we have good reason to expect that Government expenditures in the years ahead will grow more slowly than the gross national product, so that the ratio of Federal spending to our total output will continue to decline.

The expenditures proposed in this budget reflect a careful balancing of national goals against budgetary costs. The budget I now present will, in my judgment, carry out the responsibilities of the Federal Government efficiently and wisely. It was constructed on that basis alone.

My budgets for both 1965 and 1966 have provided for major increases in areas of high national priority—particularly education, health, aid to the needy, housing, and the war on poverty. Also, for these 2 consecutive years, careful pruning of less urgent programs and vigorous cost reduction efforts have, on balance, resulted in lower expenditures in other major sectors of the budget. The application of these strict policies of priority and frugality is evident in the modest growth in administrative budget expenditures.

Consolidated cash statement.—The administrative budget is based on a definition of Federal spending which excludes such important Federal activities as social security and highway construction that are financed through trust funds. A more comprehensive measure of the Government's finances is the consolidated cash budget which covers all of the Government's programs.

On the consolidated cash basis, total payments to the public are estimated at $127.4 billion in 1966. Total receipts from the public are estimated at $123.5 billion, resulting in a net excess of payments of $3.9 billion. The estimated increase of $6.0 billion in cash payments in 1966 over 1965 is mostly in trust funds which are financed by special taxes.

About $9.5 billion of the nondefense payments recommended in this budget—almost 2½ times the size of the entire cash deficit—represent an investment in physical and financial assets which will provide benefits to the Nation for many years to come. These payments are made for Federal civil public works, equipment, and loans as well as for highways, hospitals, and other State, local, and private assets.

Federal sector, national income accounts.—Another measure of Federal finance which includes trust funds emphasizes the direct impact of Government fiscal activities on the economy. This measure is based on the national income accounts. Under this concept, Federal fiscal data are estimated on an accrual rather than a cash basis. Purely financial transactions—such as loans—which do not directly affect production or income are excluded. On this basis, the deficit for 1966 is estimated at $6.0 billion.

Federal expenditures as measured by the national income accounts are estimated to rise by $6.0 billion in 1966. This increase—covering both purchases of goods and services and other types of payments—will provide a strong stimulus for continued economic growth.

FEDERAL REVENUES

The Revenue Act of 1964 has played a major role in widening and strengthening our prosperity. At the beginning of this month, the second stage of the rate reductions provided under the Act became effective. In total, last year's tax law will decrease consumer and business tax liabilities by about $14 billion in the current calendar year.

With this substantial change in income taxes completed, it is now appropriate to revise and adjust excise taxes as well. Some of the present excises are costly and inefficient to administer. Some impose onerous recordkeeping burdens on small business. Some distort consumer choices as among different kinds of goods.

Within the revenue requirements for continued progress toward a balanced budget, I believe it is vital that we correct the most pressing of these deficiencies this year. I plan to transmit to the Congress recommendations to repeal some excise taxes and reduce others. In addition to improving the tax system, the recommended changes will increase purchasing power and stimulate further growth in the economy.

These changes should become effective July 1, 1965. They will reduce tax liabilities on a full-year basis by $1.75 billion. Revenues collected by the Treasury in 1966 will be reduced by $1.5 billion.

My other major revenue proposals this year involve important activities financed through trust funds.

I am recommending prompt enactment of a hospital insurance program for elderly persons, who are finding hospital and medical costs far greater than their ability to pay. This program should be self-financing, with a combined employer-employee payroll contribution of 0.6% on the first $5,600 of income to start in calendar year 1966.

I am also recommending an increase from $4,800 to $5,600 in the wage base on which social security taxes are paid. This would take effect on January 1, 1966, and would be coupled with a smaller increase in the payroll tax than is scheduled at that date under existing law. These changes will provide the funds for the needed increases being proposed in old-age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits.

While I am recommending reductions in certain excise taxes, I am also proposing increases in certain other excise taxes which are in the nature of user charges. The excise taxes for which I am recommending reduction or repeal are not associated with the provision of particular Government services. However, certain existing excises on transportation are in effect a charge for the use of facilities and services provided by the Government. In these cases, I am proposing changes in user charges for transportation so that different modes of transportation can compete on more equitable and efficient terms and users of special Government services will pay a greater share of the costs.

The estimated cost of completing the Interstate Highway System—which is financed by highway user taxes—has recently been increased by $5.8 billion. To avoid serious delay in completing the system, while remaining on a pay-as-you-go basis, I will include in my excise tax proposals specific recommendations for increasing certain highway user charges.

In contrast to the users of the highways, the users of the airways and inland waterways bear considerably less than the full cost of the Government investments and services provided them. Accordingly, I am recommending increased or new taxes on aviation gasoline and jet fuels and a new tax on air freight for commercial aviation. Receipts from the existing 2-cent tax on aviation gasoline should be kept in the general fund rather than transferred to the highway trust fund, and the 5% ticket tax on air passengers should be made permanent. A fuel tax for inland waterway users is also being proposed.

I will continue to press for other user charges in Government programs where benefits are provided to specific, identifiable individuals and businesses. Fairness to all taxpayers demands that those who enjoy special benefits should bear a greater share of the costs. Legislation is needed for some of the charges, such as patent and meat inspection fees. In other instances, equitable user charges will be instituted through administrative action.

I will also present recommendations to correct certain abuses in the tax-exempt privileges enjoyed by private foundations.

NEW OBLIGATIONAL AUTHORITY

This budget includes new obligational authority for 1966 of $106.4 billion in the administrative budget.

- $93.5 billion of this requires congressional action this year.
- $12.9 billion represents permanent authorizations that do not require further congressional action, mainly the appropriation for interest on the public debt.

Most of the $34.5 billion in new obligational authority recommended for 1966 for trust funds represents revenues from special taxes which are automatically appropriated.

Trust funds	31.5	31.8	34.5

The 1965 estimate in the administrative budget includes $6.0 billion of recommended supplemental authorizations. These authorizations will provide funds for several programs for which I am requesting immediate consideration and enactment—for example, housing activities and aid to Appalachia. The new obligational authority and related expenditures under these supplemental proposals are reflected fully in the estimates presented in this budget.

FEDERAL PROGRAMS AND EXPENDITURES

The soundness of a budget can only be judged by the merits of the programs it proposes and the levels of expenditure it recommends. For both old and new programs, merit turns on a weighing of benefits against costs. In constructing this budget, I have tried to apply this approach to the entire range of Government operations.

As the year unfolds, developments may occur which call for prompt action by the Government. This is particularly true in international affairs, in the civil supersonic aircraft program, and in moving ahead with the recommendations resulting from various studies and analyses I am requesting, such as that related to military and civilian pay.

Specific legislation and appropriations to meet such contingencies will be proposed as needed, but the amounts which may be required cannot now be estimated with any confidence. The budget therefore includes an allowance for contingencies of $650 million in new obligational authority and $400 million in expenditures. These amounts are larger than is customary. Their inclusion makes it clear that the budget totals are intended to provide adequately for meeting new needs that may arise or seizing new opportunities that may be presented.

Here are the highlights of my expenditure recommendations:

National defense.—We cannot afford second-best defense forces. Neither can we afford to be wasteful.

Our defense forces have reached new levels of strength. With the rapid strides made in the past 4 years and the future gains already scheduled, our powerful modern forces will be adequate to their tasks for years to come. In cooperation with our allies, we have now provided for:

- Forces able to deter nuclear attack.
- Forces able to counter conventional aggression and prevent the piecemeal erosion of the free world.
- Forces, in short, able to promote peace.

We still have improvements to make. We must maintain a strong research and development program to insure that our forces are always the most modern in the world.

The 1966 budget fully provides for these needs.

However, we are able to reduce our defense expenditures in 1966 because:

- The buildup of our forces which started in 1961 is nearly complete.
- The vigorous cost reduction program of the Department of Defense is producing large savings.
- Less effective and less economical forces are being retired or reduced as promptly as possible.

International affairs and finance.—We cannot achieve lasting world peace with armaments alone. Nor can greater worldwide prosperity be bought with money alone. These goals will be achieved only through the hard work, patience, understanding, and strength of men of good will everywhere.

Yet it is essential that we continue to put our best energies and some of our vast economic resources to work in solving the problems the world faces today. Prudent and careful expenditures for our international programs can help to keep men free, to promote understanding, and to substitute cooperation and negotiation for force in world affairs.

The 1966 budget calls for only a very modest increase in foreign economic assistance expenditures. With these funds, we will continue to concentrate our aid efforts in those less developed countries that are demonstrating the will and determination required to achieve political stability and economic growth.

We shall maintain our firm commitment to the Alliance for Progress—the focus of our efforts to achieve unity and understanding in this hemisphere. As an important part of this commitment, I recommend prompt action to permit our participation in the expansion of the Inter-American Development Bank.

This budget also enables us to:

- Continue our participation in and support for the United Nations.
- Maintain an adequate and alert network of diplomatic posts around the world.
- Improve our overseas information activities, so that others may know us not just as a rich nation, but as a free and responsible nation as well.

• Expand the Peace Corps, by now a proven experiment in international cooperation.

In an important step to strengthen the free world's financial system, the members of the International Monetary Fund are considering an increase in quotas. Upon completion of these discussions, expected shortly, I shall recommend that the Congress authorize promptly the funds needed to provide the U.S. share of this increase.

Space research and technology.—This Nation has embarked on a bold program of space exploration and research which holds promise of rich rewards in many fields of American life. Our boldness is clearly indicated by the broad scope of our program and by our intent to send men to the moon within this decade.

The costs are high—as we knew they would be when we launched this effort. We have seen a rise in annual expenditures for the space program from less than one-half billion dollars in 1960 to over $4 billion in 1964.

Expenditures are continuing to increase. However, we have built up momentum and are concentrating on our highest priority goals. Therefore, we will no longer need to increase space outlays by huge sums each year in order to meet our present objectives.

This budget proposes that expenditures increase by $200 million in 1966 over 1965. This is the smallest annual increase since 1959. The new obligational authority requested is about the same as enacted for 1965.

Agriculture and agricultural resources.—The increased productive efficiency of our farms has contributed greatly to growth of the national economy. This efficiency, in turn, has contributed, along with our high per capita income, to making us the best-fed nation in the world, while men are leaving farms and entering other occupations.

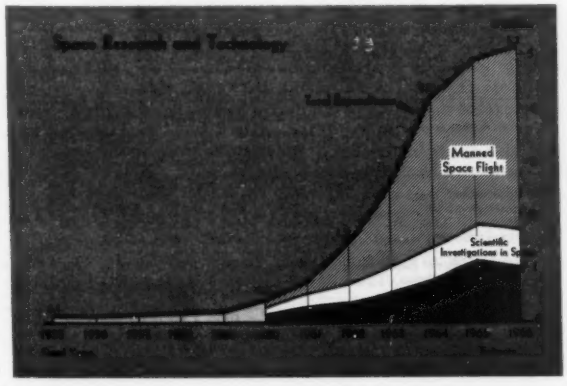
However, because of lack of adequate employment opportunities, the rapidly declining need for people to operate our farms has also meant low incomes for all too many of our rural families. We must therefore find ways to help provide a greater share of our national prosperity for those rural families that do not farm or who can no longer look to farming as a sole source of income.

Progress toward this goal will be made both through broader programs to fight poverty and through programs specially aimed at increasing economic opportunities and improving living conditions for rural people. The latter include a proposal for an insured loan program which will help provide more and better housing in rural areas.

I shall shortly transmit to the Congress my recommendations to continue and improve our farm commodity programs.

For the longer run, we need to explore new approaches to the problems with which the farm commodity programs are designed to deal.

I have directed the Secretary of Agriculture to make a comprehensive review of the kinds of programs needed for the changing farm economy. I strongly believe that programs can be designed that will continue the national benefit from our present highly efficient commercial agriculture, bolster farm income, put less burden on the Federal budget, and direct more of our effort to the problems of low-income farmers.



Natural resources.—During its last session, the Congress passed a number of far-reaching laws that will advance significantly the development, conservation, and use of our natural resources. They include the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, the Wilderness Act, and the Water Resources Research Act. The 1966 budget will implement these measures.

The budget also recommends the start of 37 new projects by the Corps of Engineers, 9 new projects by the Bureau of Reclamation, and 5 new projects by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

About two-thirds of the total expenditures for natural resources will be used to continue construction and operation of projects to provide water, control floods, improve navigation, and generate power.

Increased attention has been focused in recent years on the importance of the wise use and conservation of our water resources. Federal investment in water and related resources development has grown sharply—and is expected to grow further in the period ahead.

Urban, industrial, and recreational requirements for water have increased greatly in recent years and will continue to increase as our economy grows. The relative priorities of many historic water uses, including cropland, are changing. The implications of the changing needs for water resources programs and the most effective means of achieving our objectives are under intensified review to meet changing priorities.

The budget provides for a major expansion in research to develop improved technology for desalting water, including the use of nuclear energy. This program holds important promise in a world where water is a key to economic development and well-being.

I am also again recommending legislation to authorize river basin planning commissions and grants to States for planning the best use of water resources.

Nuclear energy will become increasingly important in meeting the rapidly growing demand for electric power. Power reactors must be improved, however, to make better use of nuclear fuel resources than they do today, as well as to provide economical electricity. In 1966, the Atomic Energy Commission plans to join with non-Federal groups in the construction of two different advanced power reactors which incorporate substantial improvements over those now in use.

The Commission is also working toward the long-range objective of high-gain breeder reactors which produce significantly more fuel than they consume. These breeders would insure a tremendous energy source for centuries to come.

Commerce and transportation.—The vitality of the millions of privately owned businesses is essential to our continued economic development. The Federal Government will continue to provide extensive encouragement toward this end.

In the depressed areas of our Nation, we must create a constructive partnership between industry and government which will improve opportunities for new investment and new jobs.

I urge prompt congressional action to:

• Extend the program begun by the Area Redevelopment Act of 1961, now scheduled to expire on June 30, 1965.

• Amend the act so that Federal aids can be concentrated in areas of greatest need and can emphasize the most effective types of assistance.

If the Nation is to have a truly efficient system of transportation, we must revise the traditional Government programs of regulation and operating subsidies to place greater reliance upon the forces of free competition. My proposals for charging users of Government transportation services a greater share of the costs incurred on their behalf are consistent with this objective. In addition, my proposals for transportation will provide for greater emphasis on the recreational and scenic aspects of our road system.

To encourage long-overdue improvements in surface transportation in our densely populated regions, I will propose legislation to authorize a comprehensive program of technical research and development on high-speed, intercity surface transport. As a first step, we will begin demonstrations of possible improvements in existing rail passenger services in the Northeast Corridor of the Nation.

By increasing efficiency and productivity, the Post Office Department has been able to avoid a general increase in postal rates since calendar year 1962. Despite these efforts, however, significant postal deficits are now estimated in the current and future years. At my request, a panel of distinguished citizens will consider whether certain postal rates should be increased to bring them into line with postal costs.

Housing and community development.—The Federal Government's role in the Nation's huge annual investment in housing and community development is largely indirect. The Government insures savings and loan accounts and mortgages, encouraging private investment and making large direct Federal investments unnecessary. Today these insurance programs are involved in about half of the homes purchased or being built.

Yet, some direct Federal aid is, and will remain, necessary. This type of aid gives incentives to forward-looking communities, lenders and builders, and private citizens, who share the national concern over the unsatisfactory state of American cities.

In a message on housing and urban development, I will present my proposals for further extension of the Federal-local-private partnership in meeting city problems. Revitalized Federal leadership through a new Department of Housing and Urban Development will be coupled with increased emphasis on comprehensive local planning.

Federal financial assistance will be offered to:

- Support the neighborhood facilities needed to serve the city's people.
- Increase the supply of low and moderate income housing.
- Continue the attack on urban blight.
- Encourage better standards of development and more adequate public facilities at the growing urban fringe.

No recent step in improving the prospects for future urban development has been more significant than the enactment of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964. To extend similar opportunities to the local communities of the National Capital region, I urge authorization of the special Federal assistance required to provide the nucleus of an adequate system of high-speed urban transportation for this area.

Health, labor, and welfare.—The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 rededicated the Nation to a vigorous attack on the causes of the poverty which grips one-fifth of our population—including 15 million children. Our objective is to mobilize local, State, and Federal resources in a coordinated effort to assist the poor—especially children and youth—to achieve a better life.

The 1966 budget provides for almost doubling the new obligational authority and quadrupling the expenditures for this effort. These funds will:

- Support 300 urban and rural community action programs.
- Provide work opportunities, remedial education, and vocational training for 330,000 youths in the Job Corps and the Neighborhood Youth Corps.
- Provide work-study opportunities for 100,000 needy college students and work experience for 110,000 unemployed adults.
- Support the Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA); finance literacy training for adults; and assist migrant workers, farmers, and other low-income rural families.

To improve health care and facilities for the American people, the 1966 budget includes new proposals for:

- Hospital insurance for the aged under social security.
- Multipurpose regional medical centers to provide the most advanced diagnosis and treatment for heart disease, cancer, stroke, and other major diseases.
- Grants for operating expenses of medical and dental schools.
- Initial staffing of community mental health centers.
- Improved medical diagnostic and treatment services for preschool and school age children and youth.
- Grants for projects to reduce water pollution caused by combined storm and sanitary sewers.
- Increased aid to State and local air and water pollution control agencies for research and for more vigorous enforcement.

Our social security system provides needed day-in and day-out support to the millions who have contributed to it during their working years. This system needs strengthening.

In addition to hospital insurance for the aged, I am proposing legislation to provide an average 7% increase in social security benefits, retroactive to January 1, 1965. The increase in benefit payments will amount to about $2 billion in 1966.

I am proposing legislation to authorize long overdue improvements in the unemployment insurance system.

Improvements are also needed in our public assistance and manpower training programs.

Legislation will be recommended to increase the Federal share of public assistance payments, establish a program of medical care for children in families unable to afford such care, and authorize payments for needy aged persons in mental and tuberculosis hospitals.

Recommendations will also be made to broaden the Manpower Development and Training Act and increase the Federal share of project costs to 90% from the 66% which would go into effect under present law in 1966.

Education.—Among the unfinished tasks of our Nation, the improvement of education deserves first priority.

It is our primary weapon in the war on poverty and the principal tool for building a Great Society.

This budget recognizes the increasing Federal responsibility to expand educational opportunity for all people and at all levels. It provides an increase in 1966 of over 60% in new obligational authority and over 75% in outlays. The programs of the Office of Education alone are more than doubled in 1966.

The 88th Congress enacted more education legislation than any previous Congress. About 30% of the estimated increase in expenditures for education in 1966 is to carry out the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963, the Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Library Services and Construction Act of 1964, and the National Defense Education Act Amendments of 1964.

But much remains to be done. Federal aid to meet critical needs in elementary and secondary education has not been enacted. Such aid is vital if we are to end the situation in which children are handicapped for life because they happen to live in communities which cannot support good schools.

EDUCATION PROGRAMS IN THE 1966 BUDGET

The program I am proposing emphasizes assistance to improve elementary and secondary education, particularly for children who live in poverty. It will step up research in education and help schools and communities to provide wider educational opportunities for all. It will also strengthen higher education by expanding assistance to colleges and to college students. My proposals were presented more fully in a special message on education.

I also propose to expand present programs of support for academic research and science education. In 1966, expenditures by the National Science Foundation will increase by 25%, primarily to help provide an adequate rate of growth in Federal support for basic research in universities. Consistent with these objectives, I recommend that the Congress remove its restrictions on payments to universities for indirect costs of research grants.

Veterans benefits and services.—Veterans benefits and services under the basic, continuing compensation, pension, and medical care programs will be at record levels in 1966.

- Nearly 4½ million veterans or their survivors will receive compensation and pension payments.
- 690,000 veterans will be admitted to hospitals, domiciliary homes, or nursing homes.

Legislation enacted in 1964 by the 88th Congress to increase pension rates and to establish new nursing home programs will entail expenditures in 1966 of more than $100 million.

In line with the trend of recent years, an increasing part of the expenditures for veterans will be for non-service-connected benefits and services. As we continue to improve our social security and health protection programs, we should place greater reliance on these programs for meeting veterans needs not connected with their military service. Our major emphasis in veterans programs should be concentrated on meeting fully our obligation to those who were disabled in the defense of the country and to their dependents and survivors.

The Appalachian region.—The Appalachian region of the United States has not shared fully in the great growth and prosperity enjoyed by the Nation as a whole. The 16 million people of this 165,000-square-mile area deserve a better opportunity to improve their region.

Many of the education, health, housing, and economic opportunity programs already outlined in the budget will help to overcome the problems brought on by chronic poverty. We need to make the most effective use of these programs. But a special effort is required to help this region. This means that Federal, State, local, and private institutions must combine to:

- Improve access to the region.
- Develop its natural resources.
- Promote better employment opportunities for its people.

I urge the enactment of legislation to make this possible.

Employee pay.—In preparing this budget, I have given close attention to the matter of Government pay.

Federal pay raises in the past 3 years have moved us much nearer to realizing the principle that civilian pay rates should be comparable to those in private enterprise for the same levels of work and that changes in pay and allowances of members of the uniformed forces should keep pace with advances in the general economy. These policies have been firmly established after careful congressional review. Taken together, they assure that civilian and military pay are effectively interrelated and maintained at rates which are fair to taxpayers and to Federal employees.

I believe, however, that it is equally essential to assure that any proposals for further pay adjustments during this calendar year accurately reflect pay developments in the private economy and be compatible with our national wage and price objectives.

For these reasons, I am appointing a special panel to make a prompt review of the present situation. This panel will be composed equally of distinguished public members and officers of the executive branch. It will report to me on April 1, 1965, after which I will make a recommendation to the Congress. Provision has been made in the allowance for contingencies for a possible military and civilian pay increase.

PUBLIC DEBT

Changes in the amount of public debt from year to year reflect primarily the amount of the budget surplus or deficit. Based on the estimates presented in this budget, the debt on June 30, 1965, will be $316.9 billion and on June 30, 1966, $322.5 billion.

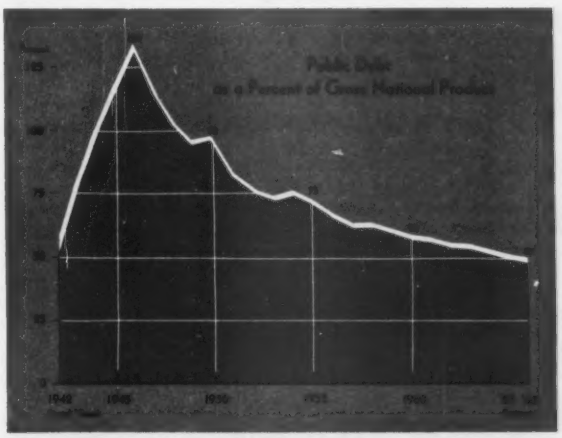
PUBLIC DEBT AT END OF YEAR

[Fiscal years. In billions]

Description	1963 actual	1964 actual	1965 estimate	1966 estimate
Owned by Federal agencies and trust funds	$57.9	$60.7	$62.5	$64.4
Owned privately and by Federal Reserve banks	248.6	251.8	254.4	258.1
Total	306.5	312.5	316.9	322.5

Note.—For further details see table 11 in part 2 of this document.

Under present law, the temporary debt limit of $324 billion will continue in effect through June 30, 1965. Then—if no action is taken—the permanent legislative ceiling of $285 billion will again become effective. It will be necessary, therefore, to raise the legal debt ceiling before that date.



The size of the debt limit needed is strongly affected by the seasonal pattern of Federal receipts and expenditures. Since receipts are always larger in the last half of the fiscal year, the public debt during 1966 will, from time to time, exceed the level presently estimated for June 30, 1966.

These seasonal fluctuations will require a higher debt limit than would be necessary if we had only to consider the amount of debt at the end of the fiscal year.

The need for flexibility in managing the debt must also be considered in fixing the debt limit. The Treasury generally borrows relatively large amounts of cash at periodic intervals during the year. These sizable financing operations are—and should be—carefully timed to take full advantage of favorable market conditions when they exist.

REDUCING GOVERNMENT COSTS

As we focus attention on improving the quality of American life, we must also see to the quality of American Government.

The tasks we face are formidable. They require new dedication, new vision, and new skills. We have neither the resources nor the right to saddle our people with unproductive and inefficient Government organization, services, or practices.

This must be a year of renewal—a year that will be long remembered for what we accomplish in bringing the public service to its highest state of readiness.

To realize this renewal, action will be necessary on a wide front. I pledge that this administration will strive to conduct the work of the Government by the same exacting standards that would apply in the most expertly managed private business.

Government organization.—We must reorganize and modernize the structure of the executive branch in order to focus responsibilities and increase efficiency. I will shortly propose certain reorganizations which will constitute the initial and most urgent steps that I deem necessary to consolidate functions and strengthen coordination of related activities.

I will ask that permanent reorganization authority be granted to the President to initiate improvements in Government organization, subject to the disapproval of the Congress.

Controlling employment.—In this budget, as in the budget for 1965, I have insisted upon stringent criteria to control the growth of Federal civilian employment. It is important that we have enough people to carry on the Government's business efficiently, but we must also see that we have no more employees than we need.

Realistic guidelines and goals have been established to aid administrators in the effective management of the Government's large and diverse work force. Controls on employment have been established for each agency. To remove the guesswork from determination of employment needs, agencies are installing improved work measurement systems, and the Bureau of the Budget is providing advice and assistance in introducing measures of productivity into agency management systems. The result of such efforts has been and will continue to be a reduction in the size of the Federal work force relative to the work being accomplished. The effectiveness of these controls may be seen in the fact that had Federal civilian employment kept its 1955 relationship to total population, Federal employees would have totaled 2,747,000 on June 30, 1964, more than 275,000 above the actual number as of that date.

Modest and highly selective increases in employment are proposed in the budget for 1966, mainly to carry out new and expanded programs recommended in this budget and to reduce excessive overtime in the Post Office Department. At the same time, we will take full advantage of every opportunity to keep the work force at minimum levels by eliminating functions, consolidating operations, closing unnecessary offices and installations, and abolishing vacancies. Total civilian employment proposed for 1966 is about 1% above the totals for the current year, and I am confident that we will be able to keep actual employment somewhat below these estimates.

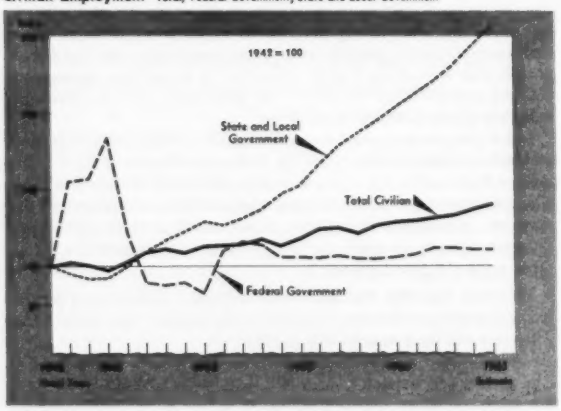
Management improvement and cost reduction.—The past year has been a successful one from the standpoint of improved management and cost reduction. Next year will be still better.

Led by the outstanding performance of the Department of Defense, Government agencies last year undertook cost reductions that saved almost $3.5 billion. These economies were not easy to come by. They have resulted from the concentrated work of Government officials and employees in all agencies, large and small. They reflect a wide variety of actions ranging from the abolition of reports and other publications to the introduction of computers, the application of modern business equipment, the adoption of new purchasing methods, and decisions to close major installations.

I am counting heavily on the continuation and acceleration of cost reduction and management improvement efforts. Every dollar saved in this way can be put to better use in carrying on more urgent business. And today every dollar is important. Among other things, we must:

- Continue our war on excessive paperwork.
- Increase our capacity to find and correct management weaknesses throughout the Government.
- Reexamine our career services, making certain that they are all they should be with respect to selection, training, placement, promotion, rotation, retirement, and removal.
- Seek legislation that will remove legal barriers to efficient operation.

Civilian Employment Total, Federal Government, State and Local Government



I have instructed the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to give direction to a comprehensive, Government-wide cost reduction program to be put into effect in every department and agency. In general, this program will require the head of each agency to:

- Take personal charge of cost reduction efforts.
- Set specific goals for reductions in cost.
- Reassess priorities for all programs and operations.
- Identify and remove roadblocks to economy.
- Verify reported savings.

I believe the Congress and the American people approve my goals of economy and efficiency. I believe they are as opposed to waste as I am. We can and will eliminate it.

CONCLUSION

Since I sent you my first budget a year ago:

- 4 million Americans have been born.
- 3.2 million young people have reached college age.
- 1.7 million new families have been formed.
- 1.3 million persons have entered the labor force.
- 1.5 million persons have reached retirement age.

Thus, our Nation faces growing responsibilities. But we also possess growing resources to meet them.

One result of our expanding economy is a larger revenue potential. This means a potential for:

- Necessary increases in Federal expenditures.
- Reductions in taxes.
- Reductions in the public debt.

No one of these goals is paramount at all times. Each must be balanced against the others to assure our continued progress toward a Great Society.

This progress does not rest on economic growth alone. It is aimed at improving the quality of our way of life. And it is aimed at insuring that all Americans share in this way of life.

The Federal Government must do its part.

This does not mean simply spending more.

It does mean spending more on some new and vital activities. But it also means cutting back or eliminating activities which are less urgent or no longer necessary.

Where there is waste, to end it; where there are needs, to meet them; where there are just hopes, to move toward their fullfillment—that is the object of the budget which I now submit to your consideration.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON.

January 25, 1965.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S JAN. 28 ECONOMIC REPORT

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Economic Report, transmitted to Congress Jan. 28:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to report

—that the state of our economy is excellent;

—that the rising tide of our prosperity, drawing new strength from the 1964 tax cut, is about to enter its fifth consecutive year;

—that, with sound policy measures, we can look forward to uninterrupted and vigorous expansion in the year ahead.

PROGRESS TOWARD OUR ECONOMIC GOALS

Full Employment

In the year just ended, we have made notable progress toward the Employment Act's central goal of ". . . useful employment opportunities, including self-employment, for those able, willing, and seeking to work, and . . . maximum employment, production, and purchasing power."

Employment:

- Additional jobs for 1½ million persons have been created in the past year, bringing the total of new jobs since January 1961 to 4½ million.
- Unemployment dropped from 5.7 percent in 1963 to 5.2 percent in 1964 and was down to 5.0 percent at year's end.

Production:

- Gross National Product (GNP) advanced strongly from $584 billion in 1963 to $622 billion in 1964.
- Industrial production rose 8 percent in the past twelve months.

Purchasing power:

- The average weekly wage in manufacturing stands at a record $106.55, a gain of $3.89 from a year ago and of $17.50 from early 1961.
- Average personal income after taxes has reached $2,288 a year—up 17½ percent in four years.
- Corporate profits after taxes have now risen continuously for four straight years—from a rate of $19½ billion early in 1961 to nearly $32 billion at the end of 1964.

But high levels of employment, production, and purchasing power cannot rest on a sound base if we are plagued by slow growth, inflation, or a lack of confidence in the dollar. Since 1946, therefore, we have come to recognize that the mandate of the Employment Act implies a series of objectives closely related to the goal of full employment:

—rapid growth,

—price stability, and

—equilibrium in our balance of payments.

Rapid Growth

True prosperity means more than the full use of the productive powers available at any given time. It also means the rapid expansion of those powers. In the long run, it is only a growth of over-all productive capacity that can swell individual incomes and raise living standards. Thus, rapid economic growth is clearly an added goal of economic policy.

- Our gain of $132 billion in GNP since the first quarter of 1961 represents an average growth rate (in constant prices) of 5 percent a year.
- This contrasts with the average growth rate of 2½ percent a year between 1953 and 1960.

Part of our faster gain in the last four years has narrowed the "gap" that had opened up between our actual output and our potential in the preceding years of slow expansion. But the growth of our potential is also speeding up. Estimated at 3½ percent a year during most of the 1950's, it is estimated at 4 percent in the years ahead; and sound policies can and should raise it above that, even while moving our actual performance closer to our potential.

Price Stability

I regard the goal of over-all price stability as fully implied in the language of the Employment Act of 1946.

We can be proud of our recent record on prices:

- Wholesale prices are essentially unchanged from four years ago, and from a year ago.
- Consumer prices have inched upward at an average rate of 1.2 percent a year since early 1961, and 1.2 percent in the past 12 months. (Much of this increase probably reflects our inability fully to measure improvements in the quality of consumer goods and services.)

Balance of Payments Equilibrium

The Employment Act requires that employment policy be "consistent" with "other essential considerations of national policy." Persistent balance of payments deficits in the 1950's reached an annual average of nearly $4 billion in 1958–60. Deficits of this size threatened to undermine confidence in the dollar abroad and limited our ability to pursue, simultaneously, our domestic and overseas objectives. As a result, restoring and maintaining equilibrium in the U.S. balance of payments has for some years been recognized as a vital goal of economic policy.

During the past four years

- Our over-all balance of payments position has improved, and the outflow of our gold has been greatly reduced.
- Our commercial exports have risen more than 25 percent since 1960, bringing our trade surplus to a new postwar record.
- The annual dollar outflow arising from our aid and defense commitments has been cut $1 billion, without impairing programs.
- Our means of financing the deficit have been strengthened, reducing the gold outflow and helping to build confidence in the dollar.

Consistency of Our Goals

Thus, the record of our past four years has been one of simultaneous advance toward full employment, rapid growth, price stability, and international balance.

We have proved that with proper policies these goals are not mutually inconsistent. They can be mutually reinforcing.

THE ROLE OF ECONOMIC POLICY

The unparalleled economic achievements of these past four years have been founded on the imagination, prudence, and skill of our businessmen, workers, investors, farmers, and consumers. In our basically private economy, gains can come in no other way.

But since 1960 a new factor has emerged to invigorate private efforts. The vital margin of difference has come from Government policies which have sustained a steady, but noninflationary, growth of markets.

I believe that 1964 will go down in our economic and political history as the "year of the tax cut."

It was not the first time that taxes were cut, of course, nor will it be the last time. But it was the first time our Nation cut taxes for the declared purpose of speeding the advance of the private economy toward "maximum employment, production, and purchasing power." And it was done in a period already prosperous by the standard tests of rising production and incomes. In short, the tax cut was an expression of faith in the American economy:

- It expressed confidence that our economy would translate higher after-tax incomes and stronger incentives into increased expenditures in our markets.
- It recognized the presence of untapped productive capacity. We cut taxes confident that the economy would respond to increased buying by producing more goods at stable prices rather than the same output at higher prices.
- It insisted on getting full performance from the American economy.

The promise of the tax cut for 1964 was fulfilled. Production, employment, and incomes jumped ahead. Unemployment was whittled down steadily.

Since 1960, the balance between budget expenditures and taxes has been boldly adjusted to the needs of economic growth. We have recognized as self-defeating the effort to balance our budget too quickly in an economy operating well below its potential. And we have recognized as fallacious the idea that economic stimulation can come only from a rapid expansion of Federal spending.

Monetary policy has supported fiscal measures. The supply of credit has been wisely tailored to the legitimate credit needs of a noninflationary expansion, while care has been taken to avoid the leakage of short-term funds in response to higher interest rates abroad.

Fiscal and monetary policies to build our prosperity have been buttressed by measures —to improve the education, skills, and mobility of our labor force;

—to stimulate investment in new and modern plants and machinery;
—to expand exports;
—to assist in rebuilding the economic base of communities and areas that have lagged behind;
—to strengthen our farm economy and support farm income;
—to conserve and develop our natural resources;
—to keep a sound flow of credit moving to home-buyers and small businesses;
—to redevelop decaying urban areas;
—to strengthen our transportation network; and
—to offer business and labor a guide for sound and noninflationary price and wage decisions.

Public policies to build a sound prosperity have found their response in equally constructive private efforts.

- Our businessmen have controlled their costs, increased their efficiency, and developed new markets at home and abroad.
- They have kept their inventories under tight control and have prudently geared their plant expansion to rising markets in an expanding economy.
- Consumers have used rising incomes and tax savings to lift their standards of living, while adding to their wealth to assure their future standards of living.
- Workers have realized that wage gains which justify employers' raising prices vanish when they take their pay envelopes into the stores—and cost them much when they draw on their savings.
- Workers and managers have cooperated to facilitate the adoption of new technology, while solving the human problems it sometimes creates.

As a result of public and private policies, we have come to our present state of prosperity without pressures or imbalances that would foretell an early end to our expansion. Instead, we look forward to another year of sustained and healthy economic growth.

THE UNFINISHED TASKS

Our prosperity is widespread, but it is not complete. Our growth has been steady, but its permanence is not assured. Our achievements are great, but our tasks are unfinished.

1. Four years of steadily expanding job opportunities have not brought us to full employment. Some 3.7 million of our citizens want work but are unable to find it. Up to 1 million more—"the hidden unemployed"—would enter the labor force if the unemployment rate could be brought down just one percentage point.

In the next year, 1.3 million more potential workers will be added to our labor force, including a net increase of ½ million below the age of 20.

The more of these 6 million potential workers who find jobs in 1965

—the faster our total output will grow;
—the greater will be the markets for the products of our factories and farms;
—the larger will be our Federal revenues;
—the greater will be the number of our citizens who know they are contributing to our society, not subsisting on the contributions of others;
—the smaller will be the number who know the pangs of insecurity, deprivation, even of hunger;
—the larger will be the number of teenagers who feel that society has a useful purpose for them.

The promise in the Employment Act of job opportunities for all those able and wanting to work has not yet been fulfilled. We cannot rest until it is.

2. Four years of vigorous efforts have not yet brought our external payments into balance. We need to complete that task—and we will.

The stability of the American dollar is central not only to progress at home but to all our objectives abroad. There can be no question of our capacity and determination to maintain the gold value of the dollar at $35 an ounce. The full resources of this Nation are pledged to that end.

Progress in key sectors of our international payments has been good, but not enough. Gains in trade and savings in Government overseas payments have been offset in large measure by larger capital outflows. As a result our deficit remains far too large. We must and will reduce and eliminate it.

In the process of restoring external balance we must continue—in concert with other nations of the free world—to build an international economic order —based on maximum freedom of trade and payments,

—in which imbalances in payments, whether surpluses or deficits, are soundly financed while being effectively eliminated,
—in which no major currency can be undermined by speculative runs, and —in which the poorer nations are helped—through investment, trade, and aid—to raise progressively their living standards toward those of the developed world.

3. Ceaseless change is the hallmark of a progressive and dynamic economy. No planned economy can have the flexibility and adaptability that flow from the voluntary response of workers, consumers, and managements to the shifting financial incentives provided by free markets.

In those activities entrusted to governments—as in those where private profit provides the spur—the search for efficiency and economy must never cease.

The American economy is the most efficient and flexible in the world. But the task of improving its efficiency and flexibility is never done.

4. American prosperity is widely shared. But too many are still precluded from its benefits by discrimination; by handicaps of illness, disability, old-age, or family circumstance; by unemployment or low productivity; by lack of mobility or bargaining power; by failure to receive the education and training from which they could benefit.

The war against poverty has begun; its prosecution is one of our most urgent tasks in the years ahead.

5. Our goals for individuals and our Nation extend far beyond mere affluence. The quality of American life remains a constant concern.

The task of economic policy is to create a prosperous America. The unfinished task of prosperous Americans is to build a Great Society.

Our accomplishments have been many; these tasks remain unfinished:

—to achieve full employment without inflation;
—to restore external equilibrium and defend the dollar;
—to enhance the efficiency and flexibility of our private and public economies;
—to widen the benefits of prosperity;
—to improve the quality of American life.

ECONOMIC PROSPECTS FOR 1965

Approval of the fiscal program I have recommended means that GNP in 1965 should expand over 1964's record level and reach—as the midpoint of a $10 billion range—$660 billion for the year.

Carried forward by the momentum of last year's gains and fueled by the continuing stimulus of profits enlarged through tax reduction, private business investment in plant and equipment should grow nearly as much in 1965 as it did in 1964.

Current rapid gains in sales, and slim stocks in 1964, should produce a higher rate of production for inventory in 1965.

Residential construction will remain high.

State and local governments will continue to enlarge their buying.

Consumers' confidence is strong. They will respond to rising earnings, higher social security benefits, and a cut in excise taxes by lifting their purchases, thereby providing a market for a full two-thirds of our expected over-all gain in production.

FEDERAL FISCAL POLICY

Private demand will be strong in 1965. It will be further sustained by Federal fiscal measures.

The 1966 Budget Message outlines my fiscal philosophy. We have four priorities:

—to strengthen our national defense;
—to meet our pressing human needs;
—to maximize the efficiency of Government operations;
—to sustain the advance of our Nation's economy.

In these priorities lies the key to our whole strategy of attack on waste:

—the waste of lives and property and progress which is the cost of war;
—the waste of human potential and self-respect which is the cost of poverty and lack of opportunity;
—the waste of excessive Government personnel, obsolete installations, and outmoded public services which is the cost of inefficient Government;
—the waste of men and facilities and resources which is the cost of economic stagnation.

Purposeful expenditures, stimulative tax reduction, and economy in Government operations are the three weapons which, if used effectively, can relieve our society of the costs and consequences of waste.

Carrying out these principles, I have submitted a budget which will once again contribute expansionary force rather than restrictive pressure on our economy.

As measured by their effects on incomes and production, Federal expenditures, grants, and transfer payments in calendar 1965 will exceed by $5 billion their amount in 1964. The largest single part of this increase will arise from the 7 percent increase in Social Security payments I have proposed.

The reduction or elimination of many excise taxes (when fully effective, $1.75 billion a year)—partially offset by appropriate new or increased user charges—will accomplish a net tax reduction of nearly $700 million within calendar year 1965. In addition, another $1 billion reduction in corporate income tax liabilities becomes effective this year. So does a further $3 billion reduction in personal tax liabilities (although not in withholding rates).

Should unfavorable developments in the private economy during 1965 unexpectedly make this budgetary stimulus inadequate to maintain a strong pace of expansion, I shall be prepared to consider additional fiscal action.

PROGRESS TOWARD FULL EMPLOYMENT

A GNP of around $660 billion, with expansion throughout the year, will give us our fifth straight year of substantial economic gains—a record without peacetime precedent.

The productive powers of our dynamic economy are now expanding so rapidly that a gain of $38 billion will do little more than keep up with the expansion of our capacity, and will make only modest inroads into the still too heavy unemployment of our human and physical resources. But unemployment in 1965 should average less than the 5.2 percent of 1964.

The road to maximum employment, production, and purchasing power will not be easily or quickly traveled. And it has no final destination. The challenge of maintaining full employment once reached will be as urgent and as difficult as reaching it.

COMBATING RECESSIONS

A time of prosperity with no recession in sight is the time to plan our defenses against future dips in business activity.

I do not believe recessions are inevitable. Up to now, every past expansion has ended in recession or depression—usually within three years from its start. But the vulnerability of an expansion cannot be determined by the calendar. Imbalance—not old age—is the threat to sustained advance.

In principle, public measures can head off recessions before they start. Unforeseen events and mistakes of public or private policy will nonetheless occur. Recessions may be upon us before we recognize their warning signs.

We can head them off, or greatly moderate their length and force—if we are able to act promptly.

The stimulating force of tax cuts is now generally recognized.

The Congress could reinforce confidence that jobs and markets will be sustained by insuring that its procedures will permit rapid action on temporary income tax cuts if recession threatens.

Recessions usually arise from a reduction in the intensity of private demand for goods and services. At such a time, it may be appropriate to employ idle or potentially idle resources in sound programs of public expenditure.

The programs which should be considered for expansion at such times would be those —that meet important public needs;

—that are capable of quick acceleration—not just in the assignment of funds but in the hiring of workers and the production of goods;
—that in any event would have been increased in the next regular budget, or that are capable of quick and efficient termination when the need has passed.

MONETARY POLICY IN 1965

As in 1964, an expansionary monetary policy will be tempered by the urgency of our balance of payments problem. But barring domestic or international emergency, our monetary and debt-management policies can serve—as they have since 1960—to accommodate the credit needs of a noninflationary expansion.

Long-term interest rates, in particular, will continue to be held down by the vast flow of savings into private financial institutions. Long-term borrowers now reasonably plan on the essential stability of long-term interest rates in 1965.

Monetary policy must be free of arbitrary restriction. It must be prepared to move quickly

—if excessive demand should threaten inflation,
—if an outflow of liquid funds should unexpectedly worsen our balance of payments.

We expect neither of these in 1965. Rather, we expect a continuation of sound and healthy economic expansion.

The Federal Reserve system must be free to accommodate that expansion—in 1965 and in the years beyond 1965. Such an expansion needs to be supported by further orderly growth in money and credit. But this growth, as it is reflected in Federal Reserve note and deposit liabilities, could easily absorb—within two years or less, and without the outflow of a single ounce of gold—the present operating margin over the 25 percent "gold cover" required by existing law.

Clearly, we should place beyond any doubt the ability of the Federal Reserve to meet its responsibility for providing an adequate but not excessive volume of bank reserves.

Clearly, we should place beyond any doubt our ability to use our gold to make good our pledge to maintain the gold value of the dollar at $35 an ounce with every resource at our command.

I am requesting the Congress, therefore, to eliminate the arbitrary requirement that the Federal Reserve Banks maintain a gold certificate reserve against their deposit liabilities.

The desirability of prompt action does not arise from any sudden emergency. If required at any time in defense of the dollar, gold could and would be released from the present requirement under the provisions of existing law.

But we should not permit a provision of law framed for the different circumstances of an earlier day to raise any questions about our ability to carry out effective and responsible monetary and credit policies —for domestic prosperity, with stable prices, and —for defense of the dollar abroad.

MAINTAINING WAGE-PRICE STABILITY

The remarkable price stability of 1959–63 persisted throughout 1964. There is good reason to believe that it will continue in 1965.

Yet watchful caution must govern public and private policies in 1965.

Though the margin remains substantial, our economy is now closer to full utilization than at any time since 1957. Despite the general moderation of labor settlements and the general restraint by price-makers in industries that have price discretion, there have been disturbing exceptions. Moreover, temporary and accidental factors—such as those that affected some nonferrous metals in 1964—could spark price increases in another sector of our economy in the year ahead.

Individual prices will have to rise, where productivity gains are small or materials costs go up. But these should be balanced by price cuts elsewhere.

We can no more afford inflation in 1965 than we could in 1964. Our balance of payments problem is not solved. We have only recently begun to regain the competitive edge in international markets that was impaired by the inflation of the mid-1950's.

Federal budgetary and monetary policies must not permit a generalized excess of demand over supply to pull up prices. But, equally, private price and wage decisions must not push up costs and prices.

I count on the sense of public responsibility of our labor leaders and our industrial leaders to do their full part to protect and extend our price stability.

Reasonable price and wage guideposts are again spelled out in the accompanying Report of the Council of Economic Advisers. I commend them to the attention of the American public and of leaders of labor and industry.

With the help of the Council and of other agencies of Government, I intend —to maintain a close watch on wage and price developments;

—to draw public attention to those private actions which threaten the public interest;

—to ask, as I have recently done in the case of steel prices, for special, detailed analysis of price or wage increases in key sectors of the economy; and

—to oppose legislative enactments that threaten to raise costs and prices and to support those that will stabilize or reduce costs and prices.

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC POLICIES

Restoring Balance in Our External Payments

Continued cost and price stability is fundamental to correction of our balance of payments deficit—it is the foundation on which we must build our entire effort to achieve external equilibrium. In addition, we must continue and intensify more specific attacks on the problem.

- We are continuously reviewing our aid and defense programs to achieve the maximum savings in dollar expenditures abroad. Our aid programs must remain closely tied to exports of U.S. goods and services, until the balance of payments problem has been eliminated.
- We must continue and strengthen measures to promote U.S. exports.
- We will be alert to restrain any persistent outflow of short-term private funds in response to relatively high short-term interest rates in foreign countries.
- To increase our ability to attract foreign investment in U.S. securities, legislation will be proposed to improve the tax treatment of such investments.

More broadly, we need to reassess the adequacy of existing programs to deal with the balance of payments problem. The results of this reassessment will be set forth in a separate message to the Congress.

Building a Stronger World Order

Through expanded trade: In the Kennedy Round of trade negotiations now underway at Geneva, we are working intensively for a broad liberalization of world trade in both industrial and agricultural products.

A successful outcome can be of crucial benefit not only to the industrialized countries but also to the developing countries of the world.

Through improved international monetary arrangements: We take pride in our leadership in the building of the postwar system of international monetary cooperation. We find reassurance in the wholehearted resolve of the industrialized countries of the free world to avoid repeating the costly mistakes of the 1920's and 1930's. The strength of international monetary cooperation was demonstrated dramatically in 1964 in repelling speculative attacks on the Italian lira and the British pound.

We will continue to pursue orderly growth at home and abroad

—on the basis of stable convertible currencies and the fixed $35 price for gold;

—through a wide network of bilateral and multilateral credit arrangements; and —through frequent consultation between countries.

But we still have more to learn about —how best to share the burden of making necessary mutual adjustments when countries run persistent deficits or surpluses in their balances of payments, and —how best to meet the need of ensuring orderly growth in world liquidity to finance expanding world trade.

We will continue to seek agreement on these problems with other countries; we are confident that effective solutions will be found. We look toward early agreement on an increase in the resources of the International Monetary Fund, which will further strengthen the international monetary system.

Through helping to raise incomes in less developed countries: U.S. foreign assistance programs further three basic American aims. By helping to advance the economic growth of the less developed nations, they —create the kind of world in which peace and freedom are most likely to flourish;

—bring closer a world economic order in which all nations will be strong partners;

—simultaneously, give a major stimulus to U.S. exports both in the present through direct financing of U.S. goods and services and for the future by developing the recipient's ability to buy and his preference for American products.

MANPOWER POLICIES FOR A FLEXIBLE ECONOMY

Fiscal and monetary measures have the primary responsibility for furnishing "employment opportunities for those able, willing, and seeking to work."

But the creation of jobs is not enough. Job opportunities and men must be matched. Workers must have the requisite skills—and the opportunity to gain new skills if advancing technology finds less use for their old ones.

To a substantial degree, strong demand for labor will bring workers and jobs together. But sole reliance on strong demand would place price stability under an unnecessary threat. And the time needed for such adjustments would place unnecessary burdens upon displaced employees and new entrants to the labor market.

To reduce human costs, raise productivity, and make possible full employment without inflation, this Administration is developing an active manpower policy.

U.S. Employment Service

An efficient labor market brings together employers and potential employees—matching workers and jobs over time, space, and occupations. Most man-job matches occur unassisted, but a strong Federal-State employment service can make the difference between an effective and an inefficient labor market.

The efficiency of the U.S. Employment Service has improved in recent years, but further strengthening is required for truly efficient labor markets. My budget provides for that strengthening.

MANPOWER TRAINING

The Manpower Development and Training Act was passed in 1962 and broadened in 1963. Its purpose is to supply skills to those who, whether for lack of wisdom or lack of opportunity, failed to acquire them earlier. It aims to make possible retraining of those who would otherwise bear the burdens of society's technological progress.

We intend to improve and expand our training programs in 1965. We will give special attention to basic training and basic education for those at the bottom of the ladder of skills.

PRIVATE PENSION AND WELFARE FUNDS

Spectacular growth has occurred in postwar years in private pension and welfare plans. They provide a vital supplement to public programs to assist older workers, disabled workers, and workers who lose their jobs. But potential problems have become evident.

Failure to give the worker a right to his pension if he should change his employment hampers labor mobility. And in some instances, absence of full funding has imperiled the retirement incomes of the affected workers.

I have asked several groups to study these and other difficult problems. I am now releasing—for consideration by unions, employers, the public, and the Congress—the Report of my Committee on Corporate Pension Funds and Other Private Retirement and Welfare Programs.

MAINTAINING INCOMES OF THE DISADVANTAGED

Not every person can share fully in the fruits of our progress through his own daily productive effort. Large numbers of our retired and handicapped cannot work. Many workers still suffer unemployment. Even in prosperous times, some receive wages below our standards. And the poverty of one-fifth of our families traps too many of our children in lives without opportunity or aspiration.

I am proposing new programs and extensions of old ones to meet more effectively our obligation to the weak and disadvantaged.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cash benefits must be increased to provide adequate support for the aged. I urge a 7 percent rise in Social Security benefits this year, retroactive to January 1, financed by an increase next January in the covered wage base and in the combined employer and employee contribution rates. Increases in public assistance payments to the needy aged, blind and disabled, and to needy children, should be enacted. We must continue to maintain the financial soundness of the social security system, at the same time taking care that its financing avoids the "fiscal drag" which could endanger our prosperity.

HOSPITAL INSURANCE FOR THE ELDERLY

We can and must assure improved health services for the aged whose health needs are greatest and whose financial resources most meager. A hospital insurance program for the elderly, financed by contributions through social security, will provide protection against the costs of hospital and post-hospital extended care, home health visits, and outpatient diagnostic services. I urge the Congress to act promptly on this program.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Improved protection against the risks of unemployment is long overdue. A comprehensive program requires that —coverage be extended to additional workers under our Federal-State unemployment insurance program; —benefits be kept in step with wages;

—the duration of benefits be extended beyond the 26 weeks now authorized in most States for workers with a firm and substantial labor force attachment.

I shall recommend such a program.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS

A large number of workers still lack the protection of Federal minimum standards.

I shall recommend coverage for an additional 2 million workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

POVERTY

America's efforts to eradicate poverty are quickly taking shape under the Office of Economic Opportunity. Programs of community action, education, training, and work experience will strike at the roots of poverty, especially among our youth. I urge a doubling of appropriations to intensify these efforts.

IMPROVING URBAN LIFE

Our cities are the homes of more than two-thirds of the American people.

- They must be communities where men can find security, significance, and fulfillment.
- They must be centers of economic strength and commercial vitality.
- They must be seats of learning, sources of culture, and centers of scientific achievement.
- They must challenge and release the full productive and creative capacities of the people.

Our first task is to recognize that the city and its suburbs—often, indeed, several cities and their suburbs—constitute a single metropolitan area.

The Federal Government has neither wish nor power to abolish the legal boundaries that divide an urban area. But the Federal Government helps cities because many aspects of urban life pose problems of national as well as local concern. We can increasingly require—as a condition for Federal help—that the separate units work and plan together to assure that Federal aid and federally financed facilities will be used effectively in improving urban life.

We must increasingly help our cities to —develop unified metropolitan transportation systems;

—supply adequate water and sewage service;

—provide community facilities and neighborhood centers;

—build adequate housing for low- and middle-income families;

—promote more efficient land use;

—set aside open spaces and develop new suburbs;

—replace or rehabilitate slum areas; and —improve housing codes and code enforcement.

We need a new Department of Housing and Urban Development to strengthen our ability to cope with these problems.

I shall shortly send to the Congress a message containing my recommendations.

OTHER ECONOMIC POLICIES FOR 1965 AND BEYOND

NATURAL RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT

America owes her greatness partly to the large public and private investments made to develop her abundant natural resources. Rapid growth and urbanization require intensified efforts to solve old problems and imaginative approaches to new challenges.

Especially requiring study and action are

- The protection of our environment. We need to strengthen our attack on air, water, and soil pollution.
- Water resource programs. We must improve the efficiency, coordination, and comprehensiveness of our major water resource development programs. More realistic charges and user fees will improve equity and strengthen private incentives for efficient use.
- Research programs. We must find new and more efficient ways of utilizing available resources. I have recommended increased research efforts in several areas, including the desalting of sea water.
- Recreational resources. Urbanization, higher incomes, and expanded leisure time pose new demands for outdoor recreation. New and improved facilities are needed, particularly near metropolitan areas.

STRENGTHENING THE ECONOMIC BASE OF COMMUNITIES

In 1961, the Congress recognized the special needs of distressed areas by passing the Area Redevelopment Act. Since then, hundreds of urban and rural communities have been strengthened by grants, loans, technical assistance, and training programs to help to build or restore their economic base. This program has helped distressed areas to benefit more fully from sustained prosperity.

Redirection of this program can benefit from the experience of the last four years. Future assistance should be sufficient to make a significant impact on the economic growth of the communities assisted. Integrated development plans must be devised for larger economic areas with high promise of future viability, and communities must be helped to mobilize public and private leadership in an attack on local blight and depression.

I shall propose measures to achieve these goals, through an extension and strengthening of the Area Redevelopment Act.

I also urge the Congress to enact the special program to assist in redeveloping the Appalachian region.

CONSUMER INFORMATION

Informed consumer choice among increasingly varied and complex products requires frank, honest information concerning quantity, quality, and prices. Truth-in-packaging will help to protect consumers against product misrepresentation. Truth-in-lending will help consumers more easily to compare the costs of alternative credit sources.

TRANSPORTATION

The technological revolution in transportation, and large public and private investments in our highways, railroads, airways, and waterways, have greatly altered the nature of our transportation system. Our national transportation policy should be revised to reflect these changes, particularly by placing greater emphasis on competition and private initiative in interstate transportation. Fair and adequate user fees for our inland waterways, our Federal airways, and our Federal-aid highways will improve equity and efficiency in the use of these public resources.

As part of a well-rounded system of moving goods and people, there is urgent need and opportunity for high-speed, comfortable, and economical passenger transportation on densely traveled routes, such as in the Northeast corridor.

I am recommending an enlarged program of research and demonstration projects to determine the best and cheapest way to meet this need.

INDUSTRIAL SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

The Department of Commerce

—has proposed a State Technical Services Program to enable States to join with universities and industry to create new jobs through wider application of advanced technology;

—is establishing a coordinated system for scientific and technical data, to reduce unnecessary duplication of research and lower the costs of obtaining scientific data.

My budget contains funds for these desirable programs.

AGRICULTURE

Americans owe much to the efficiency of our farmers. Their independent spirit and productive genius are the envy of the world. We must continue to assure them the opportunity to earn a fair reward for their efforts.

I will transmit to the Congress recommendations for improving the effectiveness of our expenditures on price and income supports.

Many small farmers cannot expect to earn good incomes from farming. But they—along with other rural Americans—will have an opportunity to share in the fruits of our society through faster economic growth, better education and training opportunities, and improved health and community facilities. We must extend the benefits of American prosperity to all our people, including those in rural America.

EDUCATION AND HEALTH

In my message on education I proposed a program to insure an opportunity to every American child to develop to the full his mind and his skills.

In my message on health I proposed a massive new attack on diseases which afflict mankind.

We value education and health for their direct benefits to human understanding and happiness. But they also yield major economic benefits.

Investments in human resources are among our most profitable investments. Such investments raise individual productivity and incomes, with benefits to our whole society. They raise our rate of economic growth, increase our economy's efficiency and flexibility, and form the cornerstone of our attack on poverty.

I believe that the Congress will find economic as well as human reasons to support my proposals on education and health.

CONCLUSION

In our economic affairs, as in every other aspect of our lives, ceaseless change is the one constant.

Revolutionary changes in technology, in forms of economic organization, in commercial relations with our neighbors, in the structure and education of our labor force converge in our markets. Free choices in free markets—as always—accommodate these tides of change.

But the adjustments are sometimes slow or imperfect. And our standards for the performance of our economy are continually on the rise. No longer will we tolerate widespread involuntary idleness, unnecessary human hardship and misery, the impoverishment of whole areas, the spoiling of our natural heritage, the human and physical ugliness of our cities, the ravages of the business cycle, or the arbitrary redistribution of purchasing power through inflation.

But as our standards for the performance of our economy have risen, so has our ability to cope with our economic problems.

Economic policy has begun to liberate itself from the preconceptions of an earlier day, and from the bitterness of class or partisan division that becloud rational discussion and hamper rational action.

Our tools of economic policy are much better tools than existed a generation ago. We are able to proceed with much greater confidence and flexibility in seeking effective answers to the changing problems of our changing economy.

The accomplishments of the past four years are a measure of the constructive response that can be expected from workers, consumers, investors, managers, farmers, and merchants to effective public policies that strive to define and achieve the national interest in —full employment with stable prices;

—rapid economic growth;

—balance in our external relationships;

—maximum efficiency in our public and private economies.

These perennial challenges to economic policy are not fully mastered; but we are well on our way to their solution.

As increasingly we do master them, economic policy can more than ever become the servant of our quest to make American society not only prosperous but progressive, not only affluent but humane, offering not only higher incomes but wider opportunities, its people enjoying not only full employment but fuller lives.

President Asks Congressional Protection For 'The Most Basic Right' -- The Right to Vote

Following is a partial transcript of an address by President Johnson March 15 to a joint session of Congress:

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, Members of the Congress:

I speak tonight for the dignity of man and the destiny of democracy.

I urge every member of both parties, Americans of all religions and of all colors, from every section of this country, to join me in that cause.

At times history and fate meet at a single time in a single place to shape a turning point in man's unending search for freedom. So it was at Lexington and Concord. So it was a century ago at Appomattox. So it was last week in Selma, Alabama.

There, long-suffering men and women peacefully protested the denial of their rights as Americans. Many were brutally assaulted. One good man, a man of God, was killed.

There is no cause for pride in what has happened in Selma. There is no cause for self-satisfaction in the long denial of equal rights of millions of Americans.

But there is cause for hope and for faith in our democracy in what is happening here tonight.

For the cries of pain and the hymns and protests of oppressed people, have summoned into convocation all the majesty of this great government of the greatest nation on earth.

Our mission is at once the oldest and the most basic of this country: to right wrong, to do justice, to serve man.

In our time we have come to live with the moments of great crisis. Our lives have been marked with debate about great issues, issues of war and peace, issues of prosperity and depression. But rarely in any time does an issue lay bare the secret heart of America itself. Rarely are we met with a challenge, not to our growth or abundance, or our welfare or our security, but rather to the values and the purposes and the meaning of our beloved nation.

The issue of equal rights for American Negroes is such an issue. And should we defeat every enemy, and should we double our wealth and conquer the stars and still be unequal to this issue, then we will have failed as a people and as a nation.

For with a country as with a person, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

There is no Negro problem. There is no Southern problem. There is no Northern problem. There is only an American problem. And we are met here tonight as Americans, not as Democrats or Republicans. We are met here as Americans to solve that problem.

This was the first nation in the history of the world to be founded with a purpose. The great phrases of that purpose still sound in every American heart, North and South: "All men are created equal" -- "government by consent of the governed" -- "give me liberty or give me death." Those are not just clever words. Those are not just empty theories. In their name Americans have fought and died for two centuries, and tonight around the world they stand there as guardians of our liberty, risking their lives.

Those words are a promise to every citizen that he shall share in the dignity of man. This dignity cannot be found in a man's possessions. It cannot be found in his power or in his position. It really rests on his right to be treated as a man equal in opportunity to all others. It says that he shall share in freedom, he shall choose his leaders, educate his children, provide for his family according to his ability and his merits as a human being.

To apply any other test -- to deny a man his hopes because of his color or race, or his religion, or the place of his birth -- is not only to do injustice, it is to deny America and to dishonor the dead who gave their lives for American freedom.

Our fathers believed that if this noble view of the rights of man was to flourish, it must be rooted in democracy. The most basic right of all was the right to choose our own leaders. The history of this country in large measure is the history of expansion of that right to all of our people.

Many of the issues of civil rights are very complex and most difficult. But about this there can and should be no argument. Every American citizen must have an equal right to vote. There is no reason which can excuse the denial of that right. There is no duty which weighs more heavily on us than the duty we have to ensure that right.

Yet the harsh fact is that in many places in this country men and women are kept from voting simply because they are Negroes.

VOTING RIGHTS DENIED

Every device of which human ingenuity is capable has been used to deny this right. The Negro citizen may go to register only to be told that the day is wrong, or the hour is late, or the official in charge is absent. And if he persists and if he manages to present himself to the registrar, he may be disqualified because he did not spell out his middle name or because he abbreviated a word on the application. And if he manages to fill out an application he is given a test. The registrar is the sole judge of whether he passes this test. He may be asked to recite the entire Constitution, or explain the most complex provisions of state laws. And even a college degree cannot be used to prove that he can read and write.

For the fact is that the only way to pass these barriers is to show a white skin.

Experience has clearly shown that the existing process of law cannot overcome systematic and ingenious discrimination. No law that we now have on the books -- and I have helped to put three of them there -- can ensure the right to vote when local officials are determined to deny it.

In such a case our duty must be clear to all of us. The Constitution says that no person shall be kept from voting because of his race or his color. We have all sworn an oath before God to support and to defend that Constitution. We must now act in obedience to that oath.

VOTING RIGHTS BILL

Wednesday I will send to Congress a law designed to eliminate illegal barriers to the right to vote.

The broad principle of that bill will be in the hands of the Democratic and Republican leaders tomorrow. After they have reviewed it, it will come here formally as a bill. I am grateful for this opportunity to come here tonight at the invitation of the leadership to reason with my friends, to give them my views and to visit with my former colleagues.

I have had prepared a more comprehensive analysis of the legislation which I had intended to transmit to the clerks tomorrow, but which I will submit to the clerks tonight; but I want to really discuss with you now briefly the main proposals of this legislation.

This bill will strike down restrictions to voting in all elections -- federal, state, and local -- which have been used to deny Negroes the right to vote.

This bill will establish a simple, uniform standard which cannot be used however ingenious the effort to flout our Constitution.

It will provide for citizens to be registered by officials of the United States Government if the state officials refuse to register them.

It will eliminate tedious, unnecessary lawsuits which delay the right to vote.

Finally, this legislation will ensure that properly registered individuals are not prohibited from voting.

I will welcome the suggestions from all of the Members of Congress. I have no doubt that I will get some on ways and means to strengthen this law and to make it effective. But experience has plainly shown that this is the only path to carry out the command of the Constitution.

OPEN THE POLLS TO ALL

To those who seek to avoid action by their national government in their own communities, who want to and who seek to maintain purely local control over elections, the answer is simple:

Open your polling places to all your people.

Allow men and women to register and vote whatever the color of their skin.

Extend the rights of citizenship to every citizen of this land.

There is no constitutional issue here. The command of the Constitution is plain.

There is no moral issue. It is wrong to deny any of your fellow Americans the right to vote in this country.

There is no issue of states' rights or national rights. There is only the struggle for human rights.

I have not the slightest doubt what will be your answer.

But the last time a President sent a civil rights bill to the Congress it contained a provision to protect voting rights in federal elections. That civil rights bill was passed after eight long months of debate. And when that bill came to my desk from the Congress for my signature, the heart of the voting provision had been eliminated.

NO DELAY, NO COMPROMISE

This time, on this issue, there must be no delay, or no hesitation or no compromise with our purpose.

We cannot, we must not refuse to protect the right of every American to vote in every election that he may desire to participate in. And we ought not, we must not wait another eight months before we get a bill. We have already waited a hundred years and more and the time for waiting is gone.

So I ask you to join me in working long hours, nights, and weekends if necessary, to pass this bill. And I don't make that request lightly. Far from the window where I sit with the problems of our country, I recognize that from outside this chamber is the outraged conscience of a nation, the grave concern of many nations and the harsh judgment of history on our acts.

But even if we pass this bill, the battle will not be over. What happened in Selma is part of a far larger movement which reaches into every section and state of America. It is the effort of American Negroes to secure for themselves the full blessings of American life.

"WE SHALL OVERCOME"

Their cause must be our cause too. Because it is not just Negroes, but really it is all of us, who must overcome the crippling legacy of bigotry and injustice. And we shall overcome.

As a man whose roots go deeply into Southern soil I know how agonizing racial feelings are. I know how difficult it is to reshape the attitudes and the structure of our society.

But a century has passed, more than a hundred years, since the Negro was freed. And he is not fully free tonight.

It was more than a hundred years ago that Abraham Lincoln, the great President of the Northern party, signed the Emancipation Proclamation, but emancipation is a proclamation and not a fact.

A century has passed, more than a hundred years since equality was promised. And yet the Negro is not equal.

A century has passed since the day of promise. And the promise is unkept.

The time of justice has now come. I tell you that I believe sincerely that no force can hold it back. It is right in the eyes of man and God that it should come. And when it does, I think that day will brighten the lives of every American.

For Negroes are not the only victims. How many white children have gone uneducated, how many white families have lived in stark poverty, how many white lives have been scarred by fear because we wasted our energy and our substance to maintain the barriers of hatred and terror.

So I say to all of you here and to all in the nation tonight, that those who appeal to you to hold on to the past do so at the cost of denying you your future.

This great, rich, restless country can offer opportunity and education and hope to all -- all black and white, all North and South, sharecropper, and city dweller. These are the enemies -- poverty, ignorance, disease. They are enemies, not our fellow man, not our neighbor, and these enemies too, poverty, disease and ignorance, we shall overcome.

Now let none of us in any section look with prideful righteousness on the troubles in another section or the problems of our neighbors. There is really no part of America where the promise of equality has been fully kept. In Buffalo as well as in Birmingham, in Philadelphia as well as in Selma, Americans are struggling for the fruits of freedom.

This is one nation. What happens in Selma or in Cincinnati is a matter of legitimate concern to every American. But let each of us look within our own hearts and our own communities, and let each of us put our shoulders to the wheel to root out injustice wherever it exists.

As we meet here in this peaceful historic chamber tonight, men from the South, some of whom were at Iwo Jima, men from the North who have carried Old Glory to far corners of the world and brought it back without a stain on it, men from the East and West are all fighting together without regard to religion, or color, or region in Viet Nam; men from every region fought for us across the world twenty years ago. And now in these common dangers and these common sacrifices the South made its contribution of honor and gallantry no less than any other region of the great Republic -- in some instances, a great many of them more. And I have not the slightest doubt that good men from everywhere in this country, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Golden Gate to the harbors along the Atlantic, will rally now together in this cause to vindicate the freedom of all Americans. For all of us owe this duty; and I believe all of us will respond to it.

Your President makes that request of every American.

NEGRO HEROISM

The real hero of this struggle is the American Negro. His actions and protests, his courage to risk safety and even to risk his life, have awakened the conscience of this nation. His demonstrations have been designed to call attention to injustice, designed to provoke change, designed to stir reform. He has called upon us to make good the promise of America. And who among us can say that we would have made the same progress were it not for his persistent bravery, and his faith in American democracy.

For at the real heart of battle for equality is a deep seated belief in the democratic process. Equality depends not on the force of arms or tear gas but depends upon the force of moral right -- not on recourse to violence but on respect for law and order.

There have been many pressures upon your President and there will be others as the days come and go, but I pledge you tonight that we intend to fight this battle where it should be fought, in the courts, and in the Congress, and in the hearts of men.

We must preserve the right of free speech and the right of free assembly. But the right of free speech does not carry with it as has been said, the right to holler "fire" in a crowded theater. We must preserve the right to free assembly but free assembly does not carry with it the right to block public thoroughfares to traffic.

We do have a right to protest, and a right to march under conditions that do not infringe the constitutional rights of our neighbors. I intend to protect all those rights as long as I am permitted to serve in this Office.

We will guard against violence, knowing it strikes from our hands the very weapons with which we seek progress -- obedience to law, and belief in American values.

In Selma as elsewhere we seek and pray for peace. We seek order. We seek unity. But we will not accept the peace of stifled rights, or the order imposed by fear, or the unity that stifles protest. For peace cannot be purchased at the cost of liberty.

In Selma tonight -- and we had a good day there -- as in every city, we are working for just and peaceful settlement. We must all remember that after this speech I am making tonight, after the police and the FBI and the marshals have all gone, and after you have promptly passed this bill, the people of Selma and the other cities of the nation must still live and work together. And when the attention of the nation has gone elsewhere they must try to heal the wounds and to build a new community. This cannot be easily done on a battleground of violence as the history of the South itself shows. It is in recognition of this that men of both races have shown such an outstandingly impressive responsibility in recent days, last Tuesday, again today.

PART OF BROAD PROGRAM

The bill that I am presenting to you will be known as a civil rights bill. But, in a larger sense, most of the program I am recommending is a civil right. Its object is to open the city of hope to all people of all races, because all Americans just must have the right to vote. And we are going to give them that right.

All Americans must have the privileges of citizenship regardless of race. And they are going to have those privileges of citizenship regardless of race.

But I would like to caution you and remind you that to exercise these privileges takes much more than just legal right. It requires a trained mind and a healthy body. It requires a decent home, and the chance to find a job, and the opportunity to escape from the clutches of poverty.

Of course people cannot contribute to the nation if they are never taught to read or write, if their bodies are stunted from hunger, if their sickness goes untended, if their life is spent in hopeless poverty just drawing a welfare check.

So we want to open the gates to opportunity. But we are also going to give all our people, black and white, the help that they need to walk through those gates.

My first job after college was as a teacher in Cotulla, Texas, in a small Mexican-American school. Few of them could speak English and I couldn't speak much Spanish. My students were poor and they often came to class without breakfast, hungry, and they knew even in their youth that pain of prejudice. They never seemed to know why people disliked them. But they knew it was so. Because I saw it in their eyes. I often walked home late in the afternoon after the classes were finished, wishing there was more that I could do. But all I knew was to teach them the little that I knew, hoping that it might help them against the hardships that lay ahead.

Somehow you never forget what poverty and hatred can do when you see its scars on the hopeful face of a young child.

I never thought then in 1928 that I would be standing here in 1965. It never even occurred to me in my fondest dreams that I might have the chance to help the sons and daughters of those students and to help people like them all over this country. But now I do have that chance and I let you in on a secret, I mean to use it. And I hope that you will use it with me.

This is the richest and most powerful country which ever occupied this globe. The might of past empires is little compared to ours.

But I do not want to be the President who built empires, or sought grandeur, or extended dominion. I want to be the President who educated young children to the wonders of their world. I want to be the President who helped to feed the hungry and to prepare them to be taxpayers instead of taxeaters. I want to be the President who helped the poor to find their own way and who protected the right of every citizen to vote in every election. I want to be the President who helped to end hatred among his fellow men and who prompted love among the people of all races and all regions and all parties. I want to be the President who helped to end war among the brothers of this earth.

And so at the request of your beloved Speaker and Senator from Montana, the Majority Leader, the Senator from Illinois, the Minority Leader, Mr. McCulloch and other leaders of both parties, I came here tonight not as President Roosevelt came down one time in person to veto a bonus bill, not as President Truman came down one time to urge the passage of a railroad bill, but I came down here to ask you to share this task with me and to share it with the people that we both work for. I want this to be the Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, which did all those things for all these people.

OUT YONDER

Beyond this great chamber, out yonder, the fifty states are the people we serve. Who can tell what deep and unspoken hopes are in their hearts tonight as they sit there and listen? We all can guess, from our own lives, how difficult they often find their own pursuit of happiness. How many problems each little family has. They look most of all to themselves for their futures. But I think that they also look to each of us.

Above the pyramid on the great seal of the United States it says -- in Latin -- "God has favored our undertaking."

God will not favor everything that we do. It is rather our duty to divine His will. But I cannot help believing that He truly understands and that He really favors the undertaking that we begin here tonight.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S VOTING RIGHTS MESSAGE

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's message on voting rights, transmitted to Congress March 15:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

In this same month ninety-five years ago -- on March 30, 1870 -- the Constitution of the United States was amended for the fifteenth time to guarantee that no citizen of our land should be denied the right to vote because of race or color.

The command of the Fifteenth Amendment is unequivocal and its equal force upon State Governments and the Federal Government is unarguable.

Section 1 of this Amendment provides:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

By the oath I have taken "to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States," duty directs -- and strong personal conviction impels -- that I advise the Congress that action is necessary, and necessary now, if the Constitution is to be upheld and the rights of all citizens are not to be mocked, abused and denied.

I must regretfully report to the Congress the following facts:

1. That the Fifteenth Amendment of our Constitution is today being systematically and willfully circumvented in certain state and local jurisdictions of our nation.
2. That representatives of such state and local governments acting "under the color of law," are denying American citizens the right to vote on the sole basis of race or color.
3. That, as a result of these practices in some areas of our country today no significant number of American citizens of the Negro race can be registered to vote except upon the intervention and order of a federal court.
4. That the remedies available under law to citizens thus denied their Constitutional rights -- and the authority presently available to the Federal Government to act in their behalf -- are clearly inadequate.
5. That the denial of these rights and the frustration of efforts to obtain meaningful relief from such denial without undue delay is contributing to the creation of conditions which are both inimical to our domestic order and tranquillity and incompatible with the standards of equal justice and individual dignity on which our society stands.

I am, therefore calling upon the Congress to discharge the duty authorized in Section 2 of the Fifteenth Amendment "to enforce this Article by appropriate legislation."

I.

It could never be a welcome duty for any President to place before Congress such a report of the willful failure and refusal of public officials to honor, respect and abide by any provision of the Constitution of the United States. It is especially repugnant to report such disregard directed against the Fifteenth Amendment by officials at the State and local levels.

The essence of our American tradition of state and local governments is the belief expressed by Thomas Jefferson that Government is best which is closest to the people. Yet that belief is betrayed by those state and local officials who engage in denying the right of citizens to vote. Their actions serve only to assure that their state governments and local governments shall be remote from the people, least representative of the people's will and least responsive to the people's wishes.

If there were no other reasons, the strengthening and protection of the vital role of state and local governments would be reasons enough to act against the denial of the right to vote for any of our citizens.

But there are other reasons to act -- clear, compelling and present reasons.

1. The challenge now presented is more than a challenge to our Constitution -- it is a blatant affront to the conscience of this generation of Americans. Discrimination based on race or color is reprehensible and intolerable to the great American majority. In every national forum, where they have chosen to test popular sentiment, defenders of discrimination have met resounding rejection. Americans now are not willing that the acid of the few shall be allowed to corrode the souls of the many.

The Congress, the Courts and the Executive, acting together in clear response to the will of the people and the mandate of the Constitution, have achieved more progress toward equality of rights in recent years than in all the years gone before. This tide will not be turned. The purposeful many need not and will not bow to the willful few.

2. In our system, the first right and most vital of all our rights is the right to vote. Jefferson described the elective franchise as "the ark of our safety." It is from the exercise of this right that the guarantee of all our other rights flows. Unless the right to vote be secure and undenied, all other rights are insecure and subject to denial for all our citizens. The challenge to this right is a challenge to America itself. We must meet this challenge as decisively as we would meet a challenge mounted against our land from enemies abroad.

3. In the world, America stands for -- and works for -- the right of all men to govern themselves through free uninhibited elections. An ink bottle broken against an American Embassy, a fire set in an American library, an insult committed against our American flag, anywhere in the world, does far less injury to our country and our cause than the discriminatory denial of the right of any American citizen at home to vote on the basis of race or color.

The issue presented by the present challenge to our Constitution and our conscience transcends legalism, although it does not transcend the law itself. We are challenged to demonstrate that there are no sanctuaries within our law for those who flaunt it. We are challenged, also, to demonstrate by our prompt, fitting and adequate response now that the hope of our system is not force, not arms, not the might of militia or marshals -- but the law itself.

II.

The problem of discriminatory denial of the right to vote has been with us ever since colonial times.

The test of real property ownership was universal among the colonies and religious qualifications were numerous. Race, color, sex, age, employment and residence were all used as the basis for qualifying voters. Such restrictions continued to flourish among the states even after formation of the Union.

The first literacy tests were legislated in Northern states in an effort to exclude immigrants -- especially Irish -- from the franchise. When the Fifteenth Amendment was adopted, there were only six states which had never discriminated against voting by Negroes.

If discrimination has been a prevalent practice in our history of voting rights, the struggle against discrimination has been our consistent purpose generation after generation.

Since the adoption of the Bill of Rights, no other right has been strengthened and fortified so often by constitutional amendment as the right to vote. As early as 1804 -- and as recently as 1964 -- the Constitution of the United States has been amended on at least six occasions to prohibit discrimination against the right to vote, to enlarge the franchise, and to assure the expression of the people's will as registered by them at the polls.

The challenge facing us today is not a challenge of what the Constitution of the United States shall say -- but of what it shall mean.

What the Fifteenth Amendment says is unmistakable. What the Fifteenth Amendment actually means for some Americans in some jurisdictions is diametrically opposite to the clear intent of the language.

By the device of equal laws, unequally applied, Negro Americans are being denied the right and opportunity to vote and discrimination is given sanction under color of law. Varieties of techniques are infinite. Three are most commonplace.

1. The technique of technical "error."

Negro applicants for registration are disqualified on grounds of technical "errors" in their registration forms. Instances of record show Negroes disqualified for "errors" such as failure to write out middle names, abbreviating the words "street" and "avenue" in addresses, or failing to compute age exactly to the day. Where this technique is employed, "errors" are found in substantially all applications filed by Negroes, but few or none in applications filed by whites.

2. The technique of non-cooperation.

A technique commonly used in conjunction with the "error" technique involves simple non-cooperation by the registrar. Thus, he may be "out" for most of the day during registration periods. Registration may be possible only on certain days each month. Limits may be imposed upon the number of applicants processed each registration day. The variety of circumventions possible by this device is endless.

3. The technique of subjective tests.

By far the most common technique by which Negro citizens are prevented from exercising their right to register and to vote is the use of subjective tests, unfairly administered literacy tests, tests of "understanding," and tests of "character." The only standard used is the whim of the registrar. Such devices are used as vehicles for the rejection of untold thousands of voters -- solely on the basis of race and color.

Whatever the technique, the intended purpose of such devices is effectively served.

-- In one state ten years ago, 59.6 percent of voting age White persons were registered to vote. Only 4.3 percent of eligible Negroes were registered to vote. The changes since then are negligible.

-- In several states, there are counties with sizeable Negro populations where not a single Negro is registered to vote.

-- In scores of other counties where discrimination is not so blatant, it remains far more difficult for Negroes to register than for whites.

Too frequently discrimination is the aim and intent of such devices and discrimination is the result.

III.

The Congress and the Executive Branch of the Federal Government have recognized -- and sought to meet -- these challenges to the authority of the Constitution of the United States. I am proud to have been closely associated with the succession of federal enactments, beginning in 1957 with the first Civil Rights Law in more than eighty years.

The major steps taken have been these:

1. The Civil Rights Act of 1957: The approach of this statute was to challenge through litigation the discriminatory use of vote tests.

2. The Civil Rights Act of 1960: This statute, pursuing the same approach, sought to simplify such litigation.

3. The Civil Rights Act of 1964: Still following the same approach, sought to expedite litigation.

In some areas litigation has been effective. But eight years of litigation has made it clear that the prompt and fair registration of qualified Negro citizens cannot be achieved under present legislation in the face of consistent defiance of the laws of Congress or the command of the Constitution.

IV.

The challenge facing us is clear and immediate -- it is also profound.

The Constitution is being flouted.

The intent of Congress expressed three times in the last seven years is being frustrated.

The national will is being denied.

The integrity of our federal system is in contest.

Unless we act anew, with dispatch and resolution, we shall sanction a sad and sorrowful course for the future. For if the Fifteenth Amendment is successfully flouted today, tomorrow the First Amendment, the Fourth Amendment, the Fifth Amendment -- the Sixth, the Eighth, indeed, all the provisions of the Constitution on which our system stands -- will be subject to disregard and erosion. Our essential strength as a society governed by the rule of law will be crippled and corrupted and the unity of our system hollowed out and left meaningless.

For these reasons, therefore, I ask the Congress under the power clearly granted by the Fifteenth Amendment to enact legislation which would:

1. Strike down restrictions to voting in all elections -- federal, state, and local -- which have been used to deny Negroes the right to vote.

2. Establish in all states and counties where the right to vote has been denied on account of race a simple standard of voter registration which will make it impossible to thwart the Fifteenth Amendment.

3. Prohibit the use of new tests and devices wherever they may be used for discriminatory purposes.

4. Provide adequate power to insure, if necessary, that federal officials can perform functions essential to the right to vote whenever state officials deny that right.

5. Eliminate the opportunity to delay the right to vote by resort to tedious and unnecessary lawsuits.

6. Provide authority to insure that properly registered individuals will not be prohibited from voting.

Our purpose is not -- and shall never be -- either the quest for power or the desire to punish. We seek to increase the power of the people over all their governments, not to enhance the power of the Federal Government over any of the people.

For the life of this Republic, our people have zealously guarded their liberty against abuses of power by their governments. The one weapon they have used is the mightiest weapon in the arsenal of democracy -- the vote. This has been enough, for as Woodrow Wilson said, "The instrument of all reform in America is the ballot."

Yet today, in areas of America, segments of our populace must live in just that involuntary condition -- policed by forces they have no voice in choosing and forced to abide by laws they have no vote in adopting.

A people divided over the right to vote can never build a nation united.

I am determined that these years shall be devoted to perfecting our unity so that we may pursue more successfully the fulfillment of our high purposes at home and in the world. While I have proposed to you other measures to serve the strengthening of our free society and the happiness of our free people, I regard action on the measures proposed in this Message to be first in priority. We cannot have government for all the people until we first make certain it is government of and by all the people.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

HIGH-SPEED TRANSIT STUDY

Following is the complete text of a March 4 letter from President Johnson to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on legislation to develop high-speed ground transportation:

Dear Mr. President: (Dear Mr. Speaker:)

I am pleased to transmit to Congress proposed legislation for high-speed ground transportation research and development. This legislation will help us to bring scientific and technical talent to bear on an increasingly important area of transportation not previously subject to intensive, continuing inquiry.

The life of every citizen is influenced by transportation service. This vast economic activity not only absorbs one out of every five GNP dollars; it shapes the environment in which we live and work. Advances in our transportation system must constantly be made if we are to continue to enjoy growth and prosperity -- and if America is to be a liveable nation.

The last three decades have produced great technological achievements in air and highway transportation. Commercial planes today fly three times as fast as they did in the 1930s. Automobiles speed along modern highways at greatly reduced travel time. The progress of our rail transportation system, unfortunately, has not matched these strides.

I believe the power of science and technology, demonstrated so well in the evolution of air and highway travel, can be utilized in the solution of other transportation problems, especially rail transportation.

Striking advances in intercity ground transportation -- advances in speed, reliability, comfort, and convenience -- are needed and possible. In the last 50 years, intercity freight tonnage has risen four times, and passenger travel has increased 25-fold. In 1960 Americans travelled over 600 billion passenger miles, exclusive of local movement. That figure will more than double by 1980.

We face an imminent need for improved intercity transportation in the densely populated area along the East Coast -- between Washington and Boston -- where travel is expected to increase by 150% to 200% between 1950 and 1980. Freight shipments during the same period may nearly double. Other such "corridors" can be identified throughout the nation. Advances in the transportation of goods and people safely, reliably and economically in one densely populated area will be directly applicable to other regions.

It is clear that we should explore the feasibility of an improved ground transportation system for such heavily travelled corridors. The program outlined by the Secretary of Commerce calls for research on materials, aerodynamics, vehicle power and control, and guideways. Information requirements for regional studies and evaluations are to be defined and the necessary data collected. We must learn about travel needs and preferences, in part through the use of large-scale demonstration projects. New methods of analyzing the problem will be developed to give adequate consideration to the large number of regional and local characteristics which influence the performance, acceptability, and cost of all kinds of systems.

The task is large and complex. Evolutionary improvement in the existing railroad system must be compared to much more radical and longer term developments. Systems proposed must be compatible with urban transportation plans. The research and development activity will require the services of many outstanding scientists, engineers, administrators and business executives. But I know that we will find the skills in industry, in the universities, and in government -- both national and local -- to do the job. The consequences of beginning now will be vital, for experience has demonstrated to us that dollars spent in sound research and development produce benefits many times over.

Sincerely,

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

President Calls for Unconditional Talks on Viet Nam Proposes Peaceful Cooperative Development of Southeast Asia

Following is a complete transcript of remarks of President Johnson April 7 at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.:

Last week 17 nations sent their views to some two dozen countries having an interest in Southeast Asia. We are joining those 17 countries and stating our American policy tonight which we believe will contribute toward peace in this area of the world. I have come here to review once again with my own people the views of the American Government.

Tonight Americans and Asians are dying for a world where each people may choose its own path to change. This is the principle for which our ancestors fought in the valleys of Pennsylvania. It is a principle for which our sons fight tonight in the jungles of Viet Nam.

Viet Nam is far way from this quiet campus. We have no territory there, nor do we seek any. The war is dirty and brutal and difficult. And some 400 young men, born into an America that is bursting with opportunity and promise, have ended their lives on Viet Nam's steaming soil.

WHY FIGHT IN VIET NAM?

Why must we take this painful road? Why must this nation hazard its ease, its interest, and its power for the sake of a people so far away?

We fight because we must fight if we are to live in a world where every country can shape its own destiny, and only in such a world will our own freedom be finally secure. This kind of world will never be built by bombs or bullets. Yet the infirmities of man are such that force must often precede reason, and the waste of war, the works of peace. We wish that this were not so. But we must deal with the world as it is, if it is ever to be as we wish.

The world as it is in Asia is not a serene or peaceful place. The first reality is that North Viet Nam has attacked the independent nation of South Viet Nam. Its object is total conquest.

Of course, some of the people of South Viet Nam are participating in attack on their own government. But trained men and supplies, orders and arms, flow in a constant stream from North to South. This support is the heartbeat of the war.

And it is a war of unparalleled brutality. Simple farmers are the targets of assassination and kidnapping. Women and children are strangled in the night because their men are loyal to their government. And helpless villages are ravaged by sneak attacks. Large scale raids are conducted on towns and terror strikes in the heart of cities.

The confused nature of this conflict cannot mask the fact that it is the new face of an old enemy.

Over this war -- and all Asia -- is another reality: the deepening shadow of Communist China. The rulers in Hanoi are urged on by Peking. This is a regime which has destroyed freedom in Tibet, which has attacked India and has been condemned by the United Nations for aggression in Korea. It is a nation which is helping the forces of violence in almost every continent. The contest in Viet Nam is part of a wider pattern of aggressive purposes.

Why are these realities our concern? Why are we in South Viet Nam? We are there because we have a promise to keep. Since 1954 every American President has offered support to the people of South Viet Nam. We have helped to build, and we have helped to defend. Thus, over many years, we have made a national pledge to help South Viet Nam defend its independence. And I intend to keep that promise. To dishonor that pledge, to abandon this small and brave nation to its enemies, and to the terror that must follow, would be an unforgiveable wrong.

TO STRENGTHEN WORLD ORDER

We are also there to strengthen world order. Around the globe, from Berlin to Thailand, are people whose well being rests in part on the belief that they can count on us if they are attacked. To leave Viet Nam to its fate would shake the confidence of all these people in the value of an American commitment and in the value of America's word. The result would be increased unrest and instability, and even wider war.

We are also there because there are great stakes in the balance. Let no one think for a moment that retreat from Viet Nam would bring an end to conflict. The battle would be renewed in one country and then another. The central lesson of our time is that the appetite of aggression is never satisfied. To withdraw from one battlefield means only to prepare for the next. We must say in Southeast Asia -- as we did in Europe -- in the words of the Bible: "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further."

There are those who say that all our effort there will be futile -- that China's power is such that it is bound to dominate all Southeast Asia. But there is no end to that argument until all of the nations of Asia are swallowed up.

There are those who wonder why we have a responsibility there. Well, we have it there for the same reason that we have a responsibility for the defense of Europe. World War II was fought in both Europe and Asia and when it ended we found ourselves with continued responsibility for the defense of freedom.

Our objective is the independence of South Viet Nam and its freedom from attack. We want nothing for ourselves -- only that the people of South Viet Nam be allowed to guide their own country in their own way. We will do everything necessary to reach that objective and we will do only what is absolutely necessary.

AIR ATTACKS

In recent months attacks on South Viet Nam were stepped up. Thus, it became necessary for us to increase our response and to make attacks by air. This is not a change of purpose. It is a change in what we believe that purpose requires.

We do this in order to slow down aggression.

We do this to increase the confidence of the brave people of South Viet Nam who have bravely borne this brutal battle for so many years with so many casualties.

And we do this to convince the leaders of North Viet Nam -- and all who seek to share their conquest -- of a simple fact:

We will not be defeated. We will not grow tired. We will not withdraw, either openly or under the cloak of a meaningless agreement.

We know that air attacks alone will not accomplish all of these purposes. But it is our best and prayerful judgment that they are a necessary part of the surest road to peace.

We hope that peace will come swiftly. But that is in the hands of others besides ourselves. And we must be prepared for a long continued conflict. It will require patience as well as bravery -- the will to endure as well as the will to resist.

I wish it were possible to convince others with words of what we now find it necessary to say with guns and planes: armed hostility is futile -- our resources are equal to any challenge -- because we fight for values and we fight for principle, rather than territory or colonies, our patience and our determination are unending.

Once this is clear, then it should also be clear that the only path for reasonable men is the path of peaceful settlement.

ESSENTIALS OF SETTLEMENT

Such peace demands an independent South Viet Nam -- securely guaranteed and able to shape its own relationships to all others -- free from outside interference -- tied to no alliance -- a military base for no other country. These are the essentials of any final settlement.

We will never be second in the search for such a peaceful settlement in Viet Nam. There may be many ways to this kind of peace: in discussion or negotiation with the governments concerned; in large groups or in small ones; in the reaffirmation of old agreements or their strengthening with new ones.

"UNCONDITIONAL DISCUSSIONS"

We have stated this position over and over again fifty times and more to friend and foe alike. And we remain ready with this purpose for unconditional discussions.

And until that bright and necessary day of peace we will try to keep conflict from spreading. We have no desire to see thousands die in battle -- Asians or Americans. We have no desire to devastate that which the people of North Viet Nam have built with toil and sacrifice. We will use our power with restraint and with all the wisdom that we can command.

But we will use it.

This war, like most wars, is filled with terrible irony. For what do the people of North Viet Nam want? They want what their neighbors also desire -- food for their hunger -- health for their bodies -- a chance to learn -- progress for their country -- and an end to the bondage of material misery. And they would find all these things far more readily in peaceful association with others than in the endless course of battle.

These countries of Southeast Asia are homes for millions of impoverished people. Each day these people rise at dawn and struggle through until the night to wrestle existence from the soil. They are often wracked by diseases, plagued by hunger, and death comes at the early age of 40.

PEACEFUL DEVELOPMENT

Stability and peace do not come easily in such a land. Neither independence nor human dignity will ever be won, though, by arms alone. It also requires the works of peace. The American people have helped generously in times past in these works, and now there must be a much more massive effort to improve the life of man in that conflict torn corner of our world.

The first step is for the countries of Southeast Asia to associate themselves in a greatly expanded cooperative effort for development. We would hope that North Viet Nam would take its place in the common effort just as soon as peaceful cooperation is possible.

The United Nations is already actively engaged in development in this area, and as far back as 1961 I conferred with our authorities in Viet Nam in connection with their work there. And I would hope tonight that the Secretary General of the United Nations could use the prestige of his great office and his deep knowledge of Asia to initiate, as soon as possible, with the countries of that area, a plan for cooperation in increased development.

BILLION DOLLAR U.S. EFFORT

For our part I will ask the Congress to join in a billion dollar American investment in this effort as soon as it is underway.

And I would hope that all other industrialized countries, including the Soviet Union, will join in this effort to replace despair with hope and terror with progress.

The task is nothing less than to enrich the hopes and existence of more than a hundred million people. And there is much to be done.

The vast Mekong River can provide food and water and power on a scale to dwarf even our own TVA. The wonders of modern medicine can be spread through villages where thousands die every year from lack of care. Schools can be established to train people in the skills needed to manage the process of development. And these objectives, and more, are within the reach of a cooperative and determined effort.

U.S. FARM SURPLUSES

I also intend to expand and speed up a program to make available our farm surpluses to assist in feeding and clothing the needy in Asia. We should not allow people to go hungry and wear rags while our own warehouses overflow with an abundance of wheat and corn and rice and cotton.

So I will very shortly name a special team of outstanding, patriotic and distinguished Americans to inaugurate our participation in these programs. This team will be headed by Mr. Eugene Black, the very able former President of the World Bank.

FUTURE OF CONFLICT

This will be a disorderly planet for a long time. In Asia, and elsewhere, the forces of the modern world are shaking old ways and uprooting ancient civilizations. There will be turbulence and struggle and even violence. Great social change -- as we see in our own country -- does not always come without conflict.

We must also expect that nations will on occasion be in dispute with us. It may be because we are rich, or powerful, or because we have made some mistakes, or because they honestly fear our intentions. However, no nation need ever fear that we desire their land, or to impose our will, or to dictate their institutions.

But we will always oppose the effort of one nation to conquer another nation.

We will do this because our own security is at stake.

A DREAM

But there is more to it than that. For our generation has a dream. It is a very old dream. But we have the power, and now we have the opportunity to make that dream come true.

For centuries nations have struggled among each other. But we dream of a world where disputes are settled by law and reason. And we will try to make it so.

For most of history men have hated and killed one another in battle. But we dream of an end to war. And we will try to make it so.

For all existence most men have lived in poverty, threatened by hunger. But we dream of a world where all are fed and charged with hope. And we will help to make it so.

The ordinary men and women of North Viet Nam and South Viet Nam -- of China and India -- of Russia and America -- are brave people. They are filled with the same proportions of hate and fear, of love and hope. Most of them want the same things for themselves and their families. Most of them do not want their sons to ever die in battle, or to see their homes, or the homes of others, destroyed.

Well, this can be their world yet. Man now has the knowledge -- always before denied -- to make this planet serve the real needs of the people who live on it.

I know this will not be easy. I know how difficult it is for reason to guide passion, and love to master hate. The complexities of this world do not bow easily to pure and consistent answers. But the simple truths are there just the same. We must all try to follow them as best we can.

We often say how impressive power is. But I do not find it impressive at all. The guns and the bombs, the rockets and the warships, are all symbols of human failure. They are necessary symbols. They protect what we cherish. But they are witness to human folly.

A dam built across a great river is impressive.

In the countryside where I was born, and where I live, I have seen the night illuminated, and the kitchen warmed, and the home heated, where once the cheerless night and the ceaseless cold held sway. And all this happened because electricity came to our area along the humming wires of the REA. Electrification of the countryside -- yes, that, too, is impressive.

A rich harvest in a hungry land is impressive. The sight of healthy children in a classroom is impressive. These -- not mighty arms -- are the achievements which the American nation believes to be impressive. And -- if we are steadfast -- the time may come when all other nations will also find it so.

Every night before I turn out the lights to sleep I ask myself this question: Have I done everything that I can do to unite this country? Have I done everything I can to help unite the world, to try to bring peace and hope to all the peoples of the world? Have I done enough?

Ask yourselves that question in your homes -- and in this hall tonight. Have we, each of us, all done all we can do? Have we done enough?

We may well be living in the time foretold many years ago when it was said: "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live."

This generation of the world must choose: destroy or build, kill or aid, hate or understand. We can do all these things on a scale that has never been dreamed of before.

Well, we will choose life. And so doing we will prevail over the enemies within man, and over the natural enemies of all mankind.

ADDITIONAL $700 MILLION REQUESTED FOR VIET NAM WAR

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's May 4 message to Congress requesting additional funds for the Viet Nam war:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

I ask the Congress to appropriate at the earliest possible moment an additional 700 million dollars to meet mounting military requirements in Viet Nam.

This is not a routine appropriation. For each member of Congress who supports this request is also voting to persist in our effort to halt Communist aggression in South Viet Nam. Each is saying that the Congress and the President stand united before the world in joint determination that the independence of South Viet Nam shall be preserved and Communist attack will not succeed.

STATISTICS ON WAR

In fiscal year 1965 we will spend about 1.5 billion dollars to fulfill our commitments in Southeast Asia. However, the pace of our activity is steadily rising. In December 1961, we had 3,164 men in South Viet Nam. By the end of last week the number of our armed forces there had increased to over 35,000. At the request of the Government of South Viet Nam in March, we sent Marines to secure the key Danang/Phu Bai area; two days ago, we sent the 173rd Airborne Brigade to the important Bien Hoa/Vung Tau area. More than 400 Americans have given their lives in Viet Nam.

In the past two years, our helicopter activity in South Viet Nam has tripled -- from 30,000 flying hours in the first quarter of 1963 to 90,000 flying hours in the first quarter of this year.

In February we flew 160 strike sorties against military targets in North Viet Nam. In April, we flew over 1,500 strike sorties against such targets.

Prior to mid-February we flew no strike sorties inside South Viet Nam. In March and April, we flew more than 3,200 sorties against military targets in hostile areas inside the country.

Just two days ago, we dispatched General C.L. Milburn Jr., Deputy Surgeon General of the Army, to assist United States representatives in Viet Nam in formulating an expanded program of medical assistance for the people of South Viet Nam. We are contemplating the expansion of existing programs under which mobile medical teams travel throughout the countryside providing on-the-spot medical facilities, treatment and training in rural areas.

REASON FOR FUNDS

The additional funds I am requesting are needed to continue to provide our forces with the best and most modern supplies and equipment. They are needed to keep an abundant inventory of ammunition and other expendables. They are needed to build facilities to house and protect our men and supplies.

The entire 700 million dollars is for this fiscal year.

The Secretary of Defense will today support this request before the appropriate Congressional committees.

Nor can I guarantee this will be the last request. If our need expands I will turn again to the Congress. For we will do whatever must be done to ensure the safety of South Viet Nam from aggression. This is the firm and irrevocable commitment of our people and nation.

U.S. COMMITMENTS

I have reviewed the situation in Viet Nam many times with the Congress, the American people and the world. South Viet Nam has been attacked by North Viet Nam. It has asked our help. We are giving that help because our commitments, our principles and our national interest demand it.

This is not the same kind of aggression with which the world has been long familiar. Instead of the sweep of invading armies, there is the steady, deadly stream of men and supplies. Instead of open battle between major opposing forces, there is murder in the night, assassination and terror. Instead of dramatic confrontation and sharp division between nationals of different lands, some citizens of South Viet Nam have been recruited in the effort to conquer their own country.

All of this shrouds battle in confusion. But this is the face of war in the 1960s. This is the "war of liberation." Kept from direct attack by American power, unable to win a free election in any country, those who seek to expand Communism by force now use subversion and terror. In this effort they often enlist nationals of the countries they wish to conquer. But it is not civil war. It is sustained by power and resources from without. The very object of this tactic is to create the appearance of an internal revolt and to mask aggression. In this way, they hope to avoid confrontation with American resolution.

But we will not be fooled or deceived, in Viet Nam or any place in the world where we have a commitment. This kind of war is war against the independence of nations. And we will meet it, as we have met other shifting dangers for more than a generation.

Our commitment to South Viet Nam is nourished by a quarter century of history. It rests on solemn treaties, the demands of principle, and the necessities of American security.

A quarter century ago it became apparent that the United States stood between those who wished to dominate an entire continent and the peoples they sought to conquer.

It was our determined purpose to help protect the independence of the Asian peoples.

The consequence of our determination was a vast war which took the lives of hundreds of thousands of Americans. Surely this generation will not lightly yield to new aggressors what the last generation paid for in blood and towering sacrifice.

When the war was over, we supported the effort of Asian peoples to win their freedom from colonial rule. In the Philippines, Korea, Indonesia and elsewhere we were on the side of national independence. For this was also consistent with our belief in the right of all people to shape their own destinies.

That principle soon received another test in the fire of war. And we fought in Korea, so that South Korea might remain free.

Now, in Viet Nam, we pursue the same principle which has infused American action in the Far East for a quarter of a century.

WHY U.S. HAS RESPONSIBILITY

There are those who ask why this responsibility should be ours. The answer is simple. There is no one else who can do the job. Our power is essential, in the final test, if the nations of Asia are to be secure from expanding Communism. Thus, when India was attacked, it looked to us for help, and we gave it gladly. We believe that Asia should be directed by Asians. But that means each Asian people must have the right to find its own way, not that one group or nation should overrun all the others.

Make no mistake about it. The aim in Viet Nam is not simply the conquest of the South, tragic as that would be. It is to show that American commitment is worthless. Once that is done, the gates are down and the road is open to expansion and endless conquest. That is why Communist China opposes discussions, even though such discussions are clearly in the interest of North Viet Nam.

Moreover, we are directly committed to the defense of South Viet Nam. In 1954 we signed the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty. That treaty committed us to act to meet aggression against South Viet Nam. The United States Senate ratified that treaty and that obligation by a vote of 82-1.

Less than a year ago the Congress, by an almost unanimous vote, said that the United States was ready to take all necessary steps to meet its obligations under that Treaty.

That resolution of the Congress expressed support for the policies of the Administration to help the people of South Viet Nam against attack -- a policy established by two previous Presidents.

Thus we cannot, and will not, withdraw or be defeated. The stakes are too high, the commitment too deep, the lessons of history too plain.

CRITICS ARE WRONG

At every turning point in the last thirty years, there have been those who opposed a firm stand against aggression. They have always been wrong. And when we heeded their cries, when we gave in, the consequence has been more bloodshed and wider war.

We will not repeat that mistake. Nor will we heed those who urge us to use our great power in a reckless or casual manner. We have no desire to expand the conflict. We will do what must be done. And we will do only what must be done.

For, in the long run, there can be no military solution to the problems of Viet Nam. We must find the path to peaceful settlement. Time and time again we have worked to open that path. We are still ready to talk, without conditions, to any government. We will go anywhere, discuss any subject, listen to any point of view in the interests of a peaceful solution.

BOMBINGS NECESSARY

I also deeply regret the necessity of bombing North Viet Nam.

But we began those bombings only when patience had been transformed from a virtue into a blunder -- the mistaken judgment of the attackers. Time and time again, men, women, and children -- Americans and Vietnamese -- were bombed in their villages and homes while we did not reply.

There was the November 1 attack on the Bien Hoa airfield. There was the Christmas eve bombing of the Brinks Hotel in Saigon. There was the February 7 attack on the Pleiku base. In these attacks 15 Americans were killed and 245 were injured. And they are only a few examples of a steady campaign of terror and attack.

We then decided we could no longer stand by and see men and women murdered and crippled while the bases of the aggressors were immune from reply.

But we have no desire to destroy human life. Our attacks have all been aimed at strictly military targets -- not hotels, and movie theaters, and embassy buildings.

We destroy bridges, so it is harder to convey the instruments of war from North to South. We destroy radar stations to keep our planes from being shot down. We destroy military depots for the infiltration of men and arms to the South. We patrol routes of communications to halt the invaders. We destroy ammunition dumps to prevent the use of explosives against our men and our allies.

Who among us can feel confident that we should allow our soldiers to be killed, while the aggressor sits smiling and secure in his sanctuary, protected by a border which he has violated a thousand times. I do not believe that is the view of the American people or of the Congress.

However, the bombing is not an end in itself. Its purpose is to bring us closer to the day of peace. And whenever it will serve the interests of peace to do so, we will end it.

'CLOSER TO PEACE'

And let us also remember, when we began the bombings there was little talk of negotiations. There were few world-wide cries for peace. Some who now speak most loudly were quietly content to permit Americans and Vietnamese to die and suffer at the hands of terror without protest. Our firmness may well have already brought us closer to peace.

Our conclusions are plain.

We will not surrender.

We do not wish to enlarge the conflict.

We desire peaceful settlement and talks.

And the aggression continues.

Therefore I see no choice but to continue the course we are on, filled as it is with peril and uncertainty.

I believe the American people support that course. They have learned the great lesson of this generation: wherever we have stood firm, aggression has been halted, peace restored and liberty maintained.

This was true in Iran, in Greece and Turkey, and in Korea.

It was true in the Formosa straits and in Lebanon.

It was true at the Cuban missile crises.

It will be true again in Southeast Asia.

Our people do not flinch from sacrifice or risk when the cause of freedom demands it. And they have the deep, abiding, true instinct of the American people: When our nation is challenged it must respond. When freedom is in danger we must stand up to that danger. When we are attacked we must fight.

I know the Congress shares these beliefs of the people they represent.

UNITY ASKED

I do not ask complete approval for every phase and action of your Government. I do ask for prompt support of our basic course: resistance to aggression, moderation in the use of power, and a constant search for peace. Nothing will do more to strengthen your country in the world than the proof of national unity which an overwhelming vote for this appropriation will clearly show. To deny and delay this means to deny and to delay the fullest support of the American people and the American Congress to those brave men who are risking their lives for freedom in Viet Nam.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

ARMS CONTROL AGENCY

Following is the complete text of a Jan. 15 letter from President Johnson to the President Pro Tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Dear Mr. President: (Dear Mr. Speaker:)

I have the honor to forward today to the Congress -- with my strongest urging that it be enacted promptly -- a draft of a bill to assure the continuing leadership of the United States in the purposeful pursuit of peace.

Four years ago, the United States became the first nation in the world to establish an Agency for Arms Control and Disarmament. The record of achievement since has refuted the doubts of those who questioned whether there was effective work for such an agency to perform. While the journey toward peace remains long, we have begun to take the first steps -- and we have found others of the family of nations willing to walk with us.

In the last year and a half, we have concluded the nuclear test ban treaty now joined by over 100 other nations. We have established a direct communications link between Washington and Moscow, joined in a United Nations resolution against weapons in space, and initiated cutbacks in the planned production of fissionable material -- a step which the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union have announced that they intend to take also.

We have, in addition, placed before the 18-nation Disarmament Conference in Geneva a number of important, concrete proposals for the control and reduction of armaments on which agreement has not yet been achieved.

In our times, as always, vigilance remains the price of liberty and we stand today as a strong, ready and vigilant nation, prepared and determined to defend our freedom and the freedom of those who stand with us. But as a nation vigilant to danger, we must also be vigilant for opportunities for improving the hopes for peace. The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency helps us keep this most vital vigil.

Since existing authorization expires on June 30, 1965, I am asking the Congress to extend that authority for four years. I do so because it is my purpose to intensify our efforts in this critical area. I am determined to work in every way that I can for safeguarded agreements that will halt the spread of nuclear weapons, lessen the risk of war and reduce the dangers and costly burdens of armaments. This effort -- as much as our continuing preparedness efforts militarily -- is essential to our security for a continued increase and spread of modern weapons can actually decrease our security.

The first legislation creating the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is a proud and honored memorial to the initiative and vision of President John F. Kennedy. It is also a living tribute to the responsibility of the Members of Congress, and in particular, to the dedicated leadership offered through the years by the Vice President-elect. Such legislation so clearly reflects the spirit and the will of the American people that I hope the Congress will act with all dispatch to give approval to this extension of the Agency's valuable role.

The background and justification for my recommendations are amplified in the accompanying letter to me from the Director of the Agency, William C. Foster, I share Mr. Foster's conclusions fully and confidently trust that the action of the Congress will impressively reaffirm to the world the dedication of this generation of Americans to the untiring quest for peace for ourselves and all mankind.

Sincerely,

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

President Calls for Broad Elementary, Secondary And College Educational Aid Programs

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 12 Message to Congress on Education:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

In 1787, the Continental Congress declared in the Northwest Ordinance:

"schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

America is strong and prosperous and free because for one hundred and seventy-eight years we have honored that commitment.

In the United States today:

One-quarter of all Americans are in the nation's classrooms.

High school attendance has grown 18-fold since the turn of the century -- 6 times as fast as the population.

College enrollment has advanced 80-fold. Americans today support a fourth of the world's institutions of higher learning and a third of its professors and college students.

In the life of the individual, education is always an unfinished task.

And in the life of this nation, the advancement of education is a continuing challenge.

There is a darker side to education in America:

One student out of every three now in the fifth grade will drop out before finishing high school -- if the present rate continues.

Almost a million young people will continue to quit school each year -- if our schools fail to stimulate their desire to learn.

Over one hundred thousand of our brightest high school graduates each year will not go to college -- and many others will leave college -- if the opportunity for higher education is not expanded.

The cost of this neglect runs high -- both for the youth and the nation.

Unemployment of young people with an eighth grade education or less is four times the national average.

Jobs filled by high school graduates rose by 40% in the last ten years. Jobs for those with less schooling decreased by nearly 10%.

We can measure the cost in even starker terms. We now spend about $450 a year per child in our public schools. But we spend $1,800 a year to keep a delinquent youth in a detention home, $2,500 a year for a family on relief, $3500 a year for a criminal in state prison.

The growing numbers of young people reaching school age demand that we move swiftly even to stand still.

Attendance in elementary and secondary schools will increase by 4 million in the next five years; 400,000 new classrooms will be needed to meet this growth. But over 1½ million of the nation's existing classrooms are already more than 30 years old.

The post-World War II boom in babies has now reached college age. And by 1970, our colleges must be prepared to add 50% more enrollment to their presently overcrowded facilities.

In the past, Congress has supported an increasing commitment to education in America. Last year, I signed historic measures passed by the Eighty-eighth Congress to provide:

- facilities badly needed by universities, colleges and community colleges;
- major new resources for vocational training;
- more loans and fellowships for students enrolled in higher education;
- enlarged and improved training for physicians, dentists and nurses.

I propose that the Eighty-ninth Congress join me in extending the commitment still further. I propose that we declare a national goal of Full Educational Opportunity.

Every child must be encouraged to get as much education as he has the ability to take.

We want this not only for his sake -- but for the nation's sake.

Nothing matters more to the future of our country: not our military preparedness -- for armed might is worthless if we lack the brain power to build a world of peace; not our productive economy -- for we cannot sustain growth without trained manpower; not our democratic system of government -- for freedom is fragile if citizens are ignorant.

We must demand that our schools increase not only the quantity but the quality of America's education. For we recognize that nuclear age problems cannot be solved with horse-and-buggy learning. The three R's of our school system must be supported by the three T's -- teachers who are superior, techniques of instruction that are modern, and thinking about education which places it first in all our plans and hopes.

Specifically, four major tasks confront us:

- to bring better education to millions of disadvantaged youth who need it most;
- to put the best educational equipment and ideas and innovations within reach of all students;
- to advance the technology of teaching and the training of teachers;
- to provide incentives for those who wish to learn at every stage along the road to learning.

Our program must match the magnitude of these tasks. The budget on education which I request for fiscal year 1966 will contain a total of $4.1 billion. This includes $1.1 billion to finance programs established by the Eighty-eighth Congress. I will submit a request for $1.5 billion in new obligational authority to finance the programs described in this message. This expenditure is a small price to pay for developing our nation's most priceless resource.

In all that we do, we mean to strengthen our state and community education systems. Federal assistance does not mean federal control -- -- as past programs have proven. The late Senator Robert Taft declared: "Education is primarily a state function -- but in the field of education, as in the fields of health, relief and medical care, the Federal Government has a secondary obligation to see that there is a basic floor under those essential services for all adults and children in the United States."

In this spirit, I urge that we now push ahead with the number one business of the American people -- the education of our youth in preschools, elementary and secondary schools, and in the colleges and universities.

I. Preschool Program

My budget will include up to $150 million for preschool projects under the Community Action Program of the Economic Opportunity Act.

Education must begin with the very young. The child from the urban or rural slum frequently misses his chance even before he begins school. Tests show that he is usually a year behind in academic attainment by the time he reaches third grade -- and up to three years behind if he reaches the eighth grade. By then the handicap has grown too great for many children. Their horizons have narrowed; their prospects for lifetimes of failure have hardened. A large percentage of our young people whose family incomes are less than $2,000 do not go beyond the eighth grade.

Preschool programs have demonstrated marked success in overcoming this initial handicap:

In New York City, children from slum neighborhoods who attended nursery school have performed better when tested in the third and fourth grades than those who did not attend.

In Baltimore, children with language and cultural handicaps are being helped greatly by a preschool program. According to preliminary reports, two-thirds of them are in the top 50% of their kindergarten and first grade classes on a city-wide measure; one-sixth of them are in the top quarter.

But today, almost half of our school districts conduct no kindergarten classes. Public nursery schools are found in only about 100 of our 26,000 school districts. We must expand our preschool program in order to reach disadvantaged children early.

Action on a wide front will begin this summer through a special "Head-Start" program for children who are scheduled to begin school next fall. In addition, funds for low-income schools, regional education laboratories, and supplementary educational centers and services (recommended below) will be devoted to these vital preschool programs.

II. Elementary and Secondary Schools

Elementary and secondary schools are the foundation of our education system.

Forty-eight million students are now in our grade and high schools.

71 percent of the nation's expenditures for education are spent on elementary and secondary schooling.

If these schools are to do their job properly, they need help and they need it now. I propose that we give first priority to a program of:

A. Aid to Low-Income School Districts

I recommend that legislation be enacted to authorize a major program of assistance to public elementary and secondary schools serving children of low-income families. My budget for Fiscal year 1966 will request $1 billion for this new program.

One hundred years ago, a man with six or seven years of schooling stood well above the average. His chances to get ahead were as good as the next man's. But today, lack of formal education is likely to mean low wages, frequent unemployment, and a home in an urban or rural slum.

Poverty has many roots but the tap root is ignorance.

Poverty is the lot of two-thirds of the families in which the family head has had eight years or less of schooling.

Twenty percent of the youth aged 18-24 with an eighth grade education or less are unemployed -- four times the national average.

Just as ignorance breeds poverty, poverty all too often breeds ignorance in the next generation.

Nearly half the youths rejected by Selective Service for educational deficiency have fathers who are unemployed or else working in unskilled and low-income jobs.

Fathers of more than one-half of the draft rejectees did not complete the eighth grade.

The burden on the nation's schools is not evenly distributed. Low-income families are heavily concentrated in particular urban neighborhoods or rural areas. Faced with the largest educational needs, many of these school districts have inadequate financial resources. This imbalance has been increased by the movement of high-income families from the center of cities to the suburbs -- and their replacement by low-income families from rural areas.

The five states with the lowest incomes spend only an average of $276 per pupil, less than half the average of the five highest-income states.

Despite a massive effort, our big cities generally spend only about two-thirds as much per pupil as their adjacent suburbs.

In our fifteen largest cities, 60 percent of the tenth grade students from poverty neighborhoods drop out before finishing high school.

This is a national problem. Federal action is needed to assist the states and localities in bringing the full benefits of education to children of low-income families.

Assistance will be provided:

- On the basis of Census data showing the distribution of low-income families among the counties or school districts within states.
- Through payments made to states for distribution to school districts.
- With the assurance that the funds will be used for improving the quality of education in schools serving low-income areas.
- On the condition that federal funds will not be used to reduce state and local fiscal efforts.
- For the benefit of all children within the area served, including those who participate in shared services or other special educational projects.

B. School Library Resources and Instructional Materials

I recommend legislation to authorize federal grants to states to assist in the purchase of books for school libraries and for student use, to be made available to children in public and private non-profit elementary and secondary schools.

Thomas Carlyle once said, "All that mankind has done, thought, gained or been: it is lying as in magic preservation in the pages of books."

Yet our school libraries are limping along.

Almost 70 percent of the public elementary schools have no libraries. Eighty-four percent lack librarians to teach children the value of learning through good books.

Many schools have an average of less than 1/2 book per child.

To meet the accepted standards for library materials would require a four-fold increase in current expenditures in our major cities.

The explosion of knowledge and the rapid revision of curricula in the schools has created new demands for school textbooks. The obsolete text can suffocate the learning process. Yet the cost of purchasing textbooks at increasing prices puts a major obstacle in the path of education -- an obstacle that can and must be eliminated.

C. Supplementary Educational Centers and Services

I recommend a program of federal grants for supplementary education centers and services within the community.

We think of schools as places where youth learns, but our schools also need to learn.

The educational gap we face is one of quality as well as quantity.

Exciting experiments in education are under way, supported by the National Science Foundation, by the Office of Education and other Government agencies, and by private philanthropic foundations. Many of our children have studied the "new" math. There are highly effective ways of teaching high school physics, biology, chemistry, and foreign languages.

We need to take full advantage of these and other innovations. Specialists can spark the interest of disadvantaged students. Remedial courses open up new vistas for slow learners. Gifted students can be brought along at a faster pace.

Yet such special educational services are not available in many communities. A limited local tax base cannot stand the expense. Most individual schools are not large enough to justify the services.

The supplementary center can provide such services as:

- Special courses in science, foreign languages, literature, music and art.
- Programs for the physically handicapped and mentally retarded.
- Instruction in the sciences and humanities during the summer for economically and culturally deprived children.
- Special assistance after regular school hours.
- Common facilities that can be maintained more efficiently for a group of schools than for a single school -- laboratories, libraries, auditoriums, and theaters.
- A system by which gifted persons can teach part-time to provide scarce talents.
- A means of introducing into the school system new courses, instructional materials, and teaching practices.
- A way of tapping the community's extra-curricular resources for the benefit of students -- museums, concert and lecture programs, and industrial laboratories.

Within each community, public and private non-profit schools and agencies will cooperate to devise the plan and administer the program for these supplementary centers. Their services should be adapted to meet the pressing needs of each locality.

D. Regional Education Laboratories

I recommend the establishment under the Cooperative Research Act of regional educational laboratories which will undertake research, train teachers, and implement tested research findings.

I further recommend amendments to the Act to:

- Broaden the types of research organizations now eligible for educational projects.
- Train educational research personnel.
- Provide grants for research, development of new curricula, dissemination of information, and implementation of educational innovations.
- Support construction of research facilities and the purchase of research equipment.

Under auspices of the National Science Foundation, educators have worked with scientists -- including Nobel laureates -- to develop courses which capture the excitement of contemporary science. They have prepared totally new instructional materials -- laboratory equipment, textbooks, teachers' guides, films, supplementary reading and examinations. After testing, they are made available to public and private schools.

We need to extend our research and development -- to history, literature, and economics; to art and music; to reading, writing, and speaking; to occupational, vocational, and technical education. We need to extend it to all stages of learning -- preschool, elementary and secondary schools, college and graduate training.

Regional laboratories for education offer great promise. They draw equally upon educators and the practitioners in all fields of learning -- mathematicians, scientists, social scientists, linguists, musicians, artists, and writers. They help both to improve curricula and to train teachers.

E. Strengthening State Educational Agencies.

I recommend a program of grants to state educational agencies.

State leadership becomes increasingly important as we seek to improve the quality of elementary and secondary education.

We should assist the states by strengthening state departments of education in their efforts to:

- Provide consultative and technical assistance for local school districts and local school leadership.
- Formulate long-range plans.
- Expand educational research and development.
- Improve local and state information about education.
- Identify emerging educational problems.
- Provide for the training of state and local education personnel.
- Conduct periodic evaluation of educational programs.
- Promote teacher improvement courses.

These new programs will substantially augment community resources in the war against poverty. As provided by sections 611 and 612 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, I will see that the new efforts are kept in step with our other anti-poverty efforts.

In those localities where the community has undertaken a Community Action Program under the Economic Opportunity Act, the community agency should participate in the planning of these new educational programs and in their coordination with on-going and developing anti-poverty efforts.

Enactment of these proposals for elementary and secondary education is of utmost urgency. I urge early and favorable consideration by the Congress.

III. Higher Education

Higher education is no longer a luxury, but a necessity.

Programs enacted by Congress in the past have contributed greatly to strengthening our colleges and universities. These will be carried forward under my 1966 budget, which includes:

- An additional $179 million to assist construction of college classrooms, libraries and laboratories.
- An additional $25 million for 4,500 more graduate fellowships to overcome college teaching shortages.
- An additional $110 million to further basic research in the universities; to provide science fellowships and to promote science education.

But we need to do more:

- To extend the opportunity for higher education more broadly among lower- and middle-income families.
- To help small and less well developed colleges improve their programs.
- To enrich the library resources of colleges and universities.
- To draw upon the unique and invaluable resources of our great universities to deal with national problems of poverty and community development.

A. Assistance to Students

1. Scholarships

I recommend a program of scholarships for needy and qualified high school graduates to enable them to enter and to continue in college.

Loans authorized by the National Defense Education Act currently assist nearly 300,000 college students. Still the following conditions exist:

Each year an estimated 100,000 young people of demonstrated ability fail to go on to college because of lack of money. Many thousands more from low-income families must borrow heavily to meet college costs.

Only one out of three young people from low-income families attend college compared with four out of five from high-income families.

For many young people from poor families loans are not enough to open the way to higher education.

Under this program, a special effort will be made to identify needy students of promise early in their high school careers. The scholarship will serve as a building block, to be augmented by work-study and other support, so that the needy student can chart his own course in higher studies.

My 1966 budget provides sufficient funds for grants to help up to 140,000 students in the first year.

2. Expansion of Work-Study Opportunity and Guaranteed Low-Interest Loans.

I recommend:

- that the existing college work-study program be made available to more students and that authority for the program be transferred to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.
- that a part of the cost of interest payments on guaranteed private loans to college students be paid by the Federal Government.

Going to college is increasingly expensive. A student must pay nearly $2,400 a year in a private college and about $1,600 in a public college. These costs may rise by one-third over the next decade.

Two aids should be extended to meet the heavy costs of college education. First, the existing work-study program should be expanded for students from low-income families and extended to students from middle-income families. Under this program the Federal Government pays 90 percent of the wages earned by students on useful projects. This will enable a student to earn on the average of $450 during a school year, and up to $500 more during the summer.

Second, many families cannot cover all of college expenses on an out-of-pocket basis. We should assure greater availability of private credit on reasonable terms and conditions. This can best be done by paying part of interest cost of guaranteed loans made by private lenders -- a more effective, fairer, and far less costly way of providing assistance than the various tax credit devices which have been proposed.

B. Aid to Smaller Colleges

I recommend that legislation be enacted to strengthen less developed colleges.

Many of our smaller colleges are battling for survival. About 10 percent lack proper accreditation, and others face constantly the threat of losing accreditation. Many are isolated from the main currents of academic life.

Private sources and states alone cannot carry the whole burden of doing what must be done for these important units in our total educational system. Federal aid is essential.

Universities should be encouraged to enter into cooperative relationships to help less developed colleges, including such assistance as:

- A program of faculty exchanges.
- Special programs to enable faculty members of small colleges to renew and extend knowledge of their fields.

- A national fellowship program to encourage highly qualified young graduate students and instructors in large universities to augment the teaching resources of small colleges.
- The development of joint programs to make more efficient use of available facilities and faculty.

In union there is strength. This is the basic premise of my recommendation.

C. Support for College Library Resources

I recommend enactment of legislation for purchase of books and library materials to strengthen college teaching and research.

50 percent of our four-year institutions and 82 percent of our two-year institutions fall below accepted professional standards in the number of volumes possessed.

As student enrollment mounts, we must look not only to the physical growth of our colleges and universities. They must be developed as true centers of intellectual activity. To construct a library building is meaningless unless there are books to bring life to the library.

D. University-Community Extension Program

I recommend a program of grants to support university extension concentrating on the problems of the community.

Institutions of higher learning are being called on ever more frequently for public service -- for defense research, foreign development, and countless other programs. They have performed magnificently. We must now call upon them to meet new needs.

Once, 90 percent of our population earned its living from the land. A wise Congress enacted the Morrill Act of 1862 and the Hatch Act of 1887 which helped the state universities help the American people. With the aid of the land grant colleges, American agriculture produced overwhelming abundance.

Today, 70 percent of our people live in urban communities. They are confronted by problems of poverty, residential blight, polluted air and water, inadequate mass transportation and health services, strained human relations, and overburdened municipal services.

Our great universities have the skills and knowledge to match these mountainous problems. They can offer expert guidance in community planning; research and development in pressing educational problems; economic and job market studies; continuing education of the community's professional and business leadership; and programs for the disadvantaged.

The role of the university must extend far beyond the ordinary extension-type operation. Its research findings and talents must be made available to the community. Faculty must be called upon for consulting activities. Pilot projects, seminars, conferences, TV programs, and task forces drawing on many departments of the university -- all should be brought into play.

This is a demanding assignment for the universities, and many are not now ready for it. The time has come for us to help the university to face problems of the city as it once faced problems of the farm.

E. Special Manpower Needs

We must also ask the colleges and universities to help overcome certain acute deficiencies in trained manpower. At least 100,000 more professional librarians are needed for service in public libraries and in schools and colleges. We need 140,000 more teachers for handicapped children.

I recommend:

- Grants to institutions of higher education for training of school, college, and community librarians and related services.
- Extension and expansion of grants for training teachers and handicapped children.

CONCLUSION

In 1838, Mirabeau B. Lamar, the second president of the Republic of Texas and the father of Texas education, declared: "The cultivated mind is the guardian genius of democracy. It is the only dictator that free man acknowledges. It is the only security that free man desires."

Throughout the history of our nation, the United States has recognized this truth. But during the periods when the country has been most astir with creative activity, when it most keenly sensed the sturdiness of the old reaching out for the vigor of the new, it has given special attention to its educational system.

This was true in the expansive 1820s and 30s, when the American people acted decisively to build a public school system for the lower grades. It was no less true at the vigorous turn of the Twentieth Century, when high schools were developed for the millions. Again, during the questing 1930s, fresh ideas stirred the traditions of the ruler and blackboard.

We are now embarked on another venture to put the American dream to work in meeting the new demands of a new day. Once again we must start where men who would improve their society have always known they must begin -- with an educational system restudied, reinforced, and revitalized.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

PRESIDENT ASKS PAY RAISE FOR MILITARY, FEDERAL WORKERS

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's May 12 message to Congress on pay increases for military personnel and civilian Government employees:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

America expects -- and receives -- much from her public servants.

In every field of endeavor vital to the security of this nation -- from foreign affairs to science and technology to national defense -- we depend on the career men and women of the federal service for competence, devotion, loyalty, and responsibility.

I have been a part of this service for almost 35 years. I have seen it perform critical and vital tasks. Most of the time it has performed at its best -- and that is the way we want it to stay.

I believe firmly that the merit system is the keystone of good government.

I believe that the public service is a profession of dignity, opportunity, and profound personal achievement.

I reject the proposition that government employment is somehow inferior to employment in business, in the professions, in university life, or in any other occupation. There can be no class system separating the men and women who are committed to the service of their fellow men or to the defense of their country.

I also believe strongly in the obligation of the Federal Government to be a good employer. And I define a good employer as one who

- -- demands excellence and rewards it
- -- is fair and just
- -- respects the dignity of his employees
- -- insists upon ethical standards and sets a good example
- -- practices no discrimination
- -- welcomes fresh ideas and new approaches
- -- fulfills his responsibilities to the community
- -- provides opportunities for growth and challenge
- -- combines prudent business judgment with enlightened policies on compensation and benefits.

NO DOUBLE STANDARD

We do not have two standards of what makes a good employer in the United States: -- one standard for private enterprise and another for the Government. A double standard which puts the Government employee at a comparative disadvantage is shortsighted. In the long run, it costs more.

In all respects, save one, the Federal Government today is meeting the test of a good employer. In the last four years we have almost -- but only almost -- achieved adequate, up-to-date, and fair pay systems for all categories of Government personnel.

We must not cease our effort now.

In my Budget Message on January 25, 1965, I announced the appointment of a Special Panel on Federal Salaries to review federal military and civilian pay levels.

That Panel presented its report to me on April 15. It is attached to this Message. I have been studying it carefully.

The report contains a series of recommendations concerning adjustment of federal pay in the fiscal year 1966.

I endorse the proposals of the Panel and recommend early action by the Congress to authorize:

-- An average increase of 3 percent in federal civilian salaries.

-- An average increase of 4.8 percent in compensation of all uniformed personnel, except enlisted personnel with under two years of service.

-- A 2.7 percent increase in base pay of enlisted personnel with less than two years of service.

These proposed adjustments will restore the relationships between civilian and military pay established in 1963.

The adjustments will not bring us to full achievement of the comparability standard enunciated in the Federal Salary Reform Act of 1962, but they will prevent loss of ground already attained.

TOTAL COSTS

Before including the full effect in retirement plans, the proposed increases will have a total annual cost of approximately $853 million -- $447 million for uniformed personnel and $406 million for civilian personnel. In order to hold the costs of pay adjustments in the fiscal year 1966 within amounts included in the Budget for that purpose, I recommend that the increases be made effective Jan. 1, 1966.

Legislation to carry out these recommendations is attached. I ask that it be referred to the appropriate committees of the Congress for early consideration.

The pay adjustments proposed in this Message emphasize the obligation of the Federal Government to insist upon maximum return from every dollar spent on a salary.

All agencies of the Executive Branch are working hard to improve the productivity of their employees and to curtail outmoded activities. All agencies have established personnel control programs which should bring to a halt unwarranted increases in average grades and average salaries.

I am continuing my personal efforts to hold down employment. The most recent monthly report of the Civil Service Commission shows that there are now about 22,000 fewer civilian employees in the Executive Branch than in December 1963.

New employees must replace many who leave, but additional employment will occur only when our responsibilities permit no other course of action.

I am proud of the progress we have made toward lean and fit competence in the discharge of federal responsibilities. Adequate pay will help us to continue our advance toward that goal.

NEW PAY PROCEDURES

The report of the Panel proposes new procedures for acting upon compensation matters in the future.

The first proposal would establish a permanent mechanism for impartial review at four-year intervals of the structure and interrelationships of all Government salary systems. Following these reviews, the President would be authorized to propose changes in salary schedules for top positions in the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Branches. The changes would go into effect automatically at a given date, unless disapproved by resolution of either house of the Congress. Other changes proposed by the President as a result of a quadrennial review would be acted upon through the regular processes for the enactment of legislation.

The second proposal would authorize a procedure for acting, between quadrennial reviews, upon such periodic adjustments in pay rates for federal civilian and military personnel as may be warranted to keep pace with changes in pay rates elsewhere in the economy. Under this proposal, the President would continue to make prescribed reports annually to the Congress. When any such annual report includes recommendations for revision of salary rates, these revisions would go into effect automatically at a given date, unless disapproved by resolution of either house of the Congress.

I concur in these recommendations of the Panel.

Legislation to establish the first of these new and improved procedures is attached.

Amendments of existing law to make the second recommendation effective are included in the bills authorizing pay adjustments for civilian and uniformed personnel.

The civilian pay bill also includes an amendment of the Federal Salary Reform Act of 1962 which would carry out another of the Panel's recommendations. This amendment would give the President discretionary authority to make salary surveys and comparisons in additional fields of non-federal employment.

Existing law limits the annual surveys and comparisons to "private enterprise." Collection and analysis of salary rate information in such fields of employment as state and local governments and non-profit institutions would give added assurance that federal salary rates are kept in appropriate relationship with salary rates prevailing throughout our economy.

OTHER PROPOSALS

Drafts of legislation to carry into effect other important recommendations contained in the Panel's report will be promptly transmitted to the Congress. These drafts will propose to:

-- Authorize certain civilian employees not now receiving premium pay for overtime to receive such pay on an equal basis with other civilian employees.

-- Establish a coordinated and equitable system for payment of moving expenses to employees transferred for the convenience and benefit of the Government.

-- Authorize payment of readjustment allowances to certain employees separated involuntarily from federal employment through no fault of their own.

The report of the Special Panel and this Message largely take the place this year of the President's annual report to the Congress, as required by the Federal Salary Reform Act of 1962. Nevertheless, the report and analysis of the Bureau of the Budget and the Civil Service Commission on the comparison of federal and private enterprise salary levels, and the views of employee organizations, should be available to the Congress. I am transmitting them by separate communication.

With the enactment of the legislation recommended in this Message, we shall have taken still another series of steps in the most far-reaching revision of federal compensation laws in the history of our country.

We shall be much nearer to full achievement of the comparability standard adopted by the Congress in 1962.

We shall have established for the first time sound procedures for maintaining interrelated salary systems for both civilian and military personnel, which will be based upon fair, clear, consistent, and up-to-date policies.

And we shall be in a far better position to attract and retain in federal service the best talent in America.

I urge prompt consideration of these proposals. Their results will more than justify their costs.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

President Asks Congressional Action to Preserve Natural Beauty in Cities and Countryside

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Feb. 8 message to Congress on Natural Beauty:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

For centuries Americans have drawn strength and inspiration from the beauty of our country. It would be a neglectful generation indeed, indifferent alike to the judgment of history and the command of principle, which failed to preserve and extend such a heritage for its descendants.

Yet the storm of modern change is threatening to blight and diminish in a few decades what has been cherished and protected for generations.

A growing population is swallowing up areas of natural beauty with its demands for living space, and is placing increased demand on our overburdened areas of recreation and pleasure.

The increasing tempo of urbanization and growth is already depriving many Americans of the right to live in decent surroundings. More of our people are crowding into cities and being cut off from nature. Cities themselves reach out into the countryside, destroying streams and trees and meadows as they go. A modern highway may wipe out the equivalent of a fifty acre park with every mile. And people move out from the city to get closer to nature only to find that nature has moved farther from them.

The modern technology, which has added much to our lives can also have a darker side. Its uncontrolled waste products are menacing the world we live in, our enjoyment and our health. The air we breathe, our water, our soil and wildlife, are being blighted by the poisons and chemicals which are the by-products of technology and industry. The skeletons of discarded cars litter the countryside. The same society which receives the rewards of technology, must, as a cooperating whole, take responsibility for control.

To deal with these new problems will require a new conservation. We must not only protect the countryside and save it from destruction, we must restore what has been destroyed and salvage the beauty and charm of our cities. Our conservation must be not just the classic conservation of protection and development, but a creative conservation of restoration and innovation. Its concern is not with nature alone, but with the total relation between man and the world around him. Its object is not just man's welfare but the dignity of man's spirit.

In this conservation the protection and enhancement of man's opportunity to be in contact with beauty must play a major role.

This means that beauty must not be just a holiday treat, but a part of our daily life. It means not just easy physical access, but equal social access for rich and poor, Negro and white, city dweller and farmer.

Beauty is not an easy thing to measure. It does not show up in the gross national product, in a weekly pay check, or in profit and loss statements. But these things are not ends in themselves. They are a road to satisfaction and pleasure and the good life. Beauty makes its own direct contribution to these final ends. Therefore it is one of the most important components of our true national income, not to be left out simply because statisticians cannot calculate its worth.

And some things we do know. Association with beauty can enlarge man's imagination and revive his spirit. Ugliness can demean the people who live among it. What a citizen sees every day is his America. If it is attractive it adds to the quality of his life. If it is ugly it can degrade his existence.

Beauty has other immediate values. It adds to safety whether removing direct dangers to health or making highways less monotonous and dangerous. We also know that those who live in blighted and squalid conditions are more susceptible to anxieties and mental disease.

Ugliness is costly. It can be expensive to clean a soot smeared building, or to build new areas of recreation when the old landscape could have been preserved far more cheaply.

Certainly no one would hazard a national definition of beauty. But we do know that nature is nearly always beautiful. We do, for the most part, know what is ugly. And we can introduce, into all our planning, our programs, our building and our growth, a conscious and active concern for the values of beauty. If we do this then we can be successful in preserving a beautiful America.

There is much the Federal Government can do, through a range of specific programs, and as a force for public education. But a beautiful America will require the effort of government at every level, of business, and of private groups. Above all it will require the concern and action of individual citizens, alert to danger, determined to improve the quality of their surroundings, resisting blight, demanding and building beauty for themselves and their children.

I am hopeful that we can summon such a national effort. For we have not chosen to have an ugly America. We have been careless, and often neglectful. But now that the danger is clear and the hour is late this people can place themselves in the path of a tide of blight which is often irreversible and always destructive.

The Congress and the Executive Branch have each produced conservation giants in the past. During the 88th Congress it was legislative-executive teamwork that brought progress. It is this same kind of partnership that will ensure our continued progress.

In that spirit as a beginning and stimulus I make the following proposals:

THE CITIES

Thomas Jefferson wrote that communities "should be planned with an eye to the effect made upon the human spirit by being continually surrounded with a maximum of beauty."

We have often sadly neglected this advice in the modern American city. Yet this is where most of our people live. It is where the character of our young is formed. It is where American civilization will be increasingly concentrated in years to come.

Such a challenge will not be met with a few more parks or playgrounds. It requires attention to the architecture of building, the structure of our roads, preservation of historical buildings and monuments, careful planning of new suburbs. A concern for the enhancement of beauty must infuse every aspect of the growth and development of metropolitan areas. It must be a principal responsibility of local government, supported by active and concerned citizens.

Federal assistance can be a valuable stimulus and help to such local efforts.

I have recommended a community extension program which will bring the resources of the university to focus on problems of the community just as they have long been concerned with our rural areas. Among other things, this program will help provide training and technical assistance to aid in making our communities more attractive and vital. In addition, under the Housing Act of 1964, grants will be made to states for training of local governmental employees needed for community development. I am recommending a 1965 supplemental appropriation to implement this program.

We now have two programs which can be of special help in creating areas of recreation and beauty for our metropolitan area population: the Open Space Land Program, and the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

I have already proposed full funding of the Land and Water Conservation Fund, and directed the Secretary of the Interior to give priority attention to serving the needs of our growing urban population.

The primary purpose of the Open Space Program has been to help acquire and assure open spaces in urban areas. I propose a series of new matching grants for improving the natural beauty of urban open space.

The Open Space Program should be adequately financed, and broadened by permitting grants to be made to help city governments acquire and clear areas to create small parks, squares, pedestrian malls and playgrounds.

In addition I will request authority in this program for a matching program to cities for landscaping, installation of outdoor lights and benches, creating attractive cityscapes along roads and in business areas, and for other beautification purposes.

Our city parks have not, in many cases, realized their full potential as sources of pleasure and play. I recommend on a matching basis a series of federal demonstration projects in city parks to use the best thought and action to show how the appearance of these parks can better serve the people of our towns and metropolitan areas.

All of these programs should be operated on the same matching formula to avoid unnecessary competition among programs and increase the possibility of cooperative effort. I will propose such a standard formula.

In a future message on the cities I will recommend other changes in our housing programs designed to strengthen the sense of community of which natural beauty is an important component.

In almost every part of the country citizens are rallying to save landmarks of beauty and history. The Government must also do its share to assist these local efforts which have an important national purpose. We will encourage and support the National Trust for Historic Preservation in the United States, chartered by Congress in 1949. I shall propose legislation to authorize supplementary grants to help local authorities acquire, develop and manage private properties for such purposes.

The Registry of National Historic Landmarks is a fine federal program with virtually no federal cost. I commend its work and the new wave of interest it has evoked in historical preservation.

THE COUNTRYSIDE

Our present system of parks, seashores and recreation areas -- monuments to the dedication and labor of far-sighted men -- do not meet the needs of a growing population.

The full funding of the Land and Water Conservation Fund will be an important step in making this a Parks-for-America decade.

I propose to use this fund to acquire lands needed to establish:

-- Assateague Island National Seashore, Maryland-Virginia
Tocks Island National Recreation Area, New Jersey-Pennsylvania
Cape Lookout National Seashore, North Carolina
Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore, Michigan
Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore, Indiana
Oregon Dunes National Seashore, Oregon
Great Basin National Park, Nevada
Guadalupe Mountains National Park, Texas
Spruce Knob, Seneca Rocks National Recreation Area, West Virginia
Bighorn Canyon National Recreation Area, Montana-Wyoming
Flaming Gorge National Recreation Area, Utah Wyoming
Whiskeytown-Shasta- National Recreation Area, California

In addition, I have requested the Secretary of Interior, working with interested groups, to conduct a study on the desirability of establishing a Redwood National Park in California.

I will also recommend that we add prime outdoor recreation areas to our National Forest system, particularly in the populous East; and proceed on schedule with studies required to define and enlarge the Wilderness System established by the 88th Congress. We will also continue progress on our refuge system for migratory waterfowl.

Faulty strip and surface mining practices have left ugly scars which mar the beauty of the landscape in many of our states. I urge your strong support of the nationwide strip and surface mining study provided by the Appalachian regional legislation, which will furnish the factual basis for a fair and reasonable approach to the correction of these past errors.

I am asking the Secretary of Agriculture to work with state and local organizations in developing a cooperative program for improving the beauty of the privately owned rural lands which comprise three-fourths of the nation's area. Much can be done within existing Department of Agriculture programs without adding to cost.

The 28 million acres of land presently held and used by our armed services is an important part of our public estate. Many thousands of these acres will soon become surplus to military needs. Much of this land has great potential for outdoor recreation, wildlife, and conservation uses consistent with military requirements. This potential must be realized through the fullest application of multiple-use principles. To this end I have directed the Secretaries of Defense and Interior to conduct a "conservation inventory" of all surplus lands.

HIGHWAYS

More than any country ours is an automobile society. For most Americans the automobile is a principal instrument of transportation, work, daily activity, recreation and pleasure. By making our roads highways to the enjoyment of nature and beauty we can greatly enrich the life of nearly all our people in city and countryside alike.

Our task is two-fold. First, to ensure that roads themselves are not destructive of nature and natural beauty. Second, to make our roads ways to recreation and pleasure.

I have asked the Secretary of Commerce to take a series of steps designed to meet this objective. This includes requiring landscaping on all federal interstate primary and urban highways, encouraging the construction of rest and recreation areas along highways, and the preservation of natural beauty adjacent to highway rights-of-way.

Our present highway law permits the use of up to 3% of all federal-aid funds to be used without matching for the preservation of natural beauty. This authority has not been used for the purpose intended by Congress. I will take steps, including recommended legislation if necessary, to make sure these funds are, in fact, used to enhance beauty along our highway system. This will dedicate substantial resources to this purpose.

I will also recommend that a portion of the funds now used for secondary roads be set aside in order to provide access to areas of rest and recreation and scenic beauty along our nation's roads, and for re-routing or construction of highways for scenic or parkway purposes.

The Recreation Advisory Council is now completing a study of the role which scenic roads and parkways should play in meeting our highway and recreation needs. After receiving the report, I will make appropriate recommendations.

The authority for the existing program of outdoor advertising control expires on June 30, 1965, and its provisions have not been effective in achieving the desired goal. Accordingly, I will recommend legislation to ensure effective control of billboards along our highways.

In addition, we need urgently to work towards the elimination or screening of unsightly, beauty-destroying junkyards and auto graveyards along our highways. To this end, I will also recommend necessary legislation to achieve effective control, including federal assistance in appropriate cases where necessary.

I hope that, at all levels of government, our planners and builders will remember that highway beautification is more than a matter of planting trees or setting aside scenic areas. The roads themselves must reflect, in location and design, increased respect for the natural and social integrity and unity of the landscape and communities through which they pass.

RIVERS

Those who first settled this continent found much to marvel at. Nothing was a greater source of wonder and amazement than the power and majesty of American rivers. They occupy a central place in myth and legend, folklore and literature.

They were our first highways, and some remain among the most important. We have had to control their ravages, harness their power, and use their water to help make whole regions prosper.

Yet even this seemingly indestructible natural resource is in danger.

Through our pollution control programs we can do much to restore our rivers. We will continue to conserve the water and power for tomorrow's needs with well-planned reservoirs and power dams. But the time has also come to identify and preserve free flowing stretches of our great scenic rivers before growth and development make the beauty of the unspoiled waterway a memory.

To this end I will shortly send to the Congress a Bill to establish a National Wild Rivers System.

THE POTOMAC

The river rich in history and memory which flows by our nation's capital should serve as a model of scenic and recreation values for the entire country. To meet this objective I am asking the Secretary of the Interior to review the Potomac River basin development plan now under review by the Chief of Army Engineers, and to work with the affected states and local governments, the District of Columbia and interested federal agencies to prepare a program for my consideration.

A program must be devised which will:

a. Clean up the river and keep it clean, so it can be used for boating, swimming and fishing.
b. Protect its natural beauties by the acquisition of scenic easements, zoning or other measures.
c. Provide adequate recreational facilities, and
d. Complete the presently authorized George Washington Memorial Parkway on both banks.

I hope action here will stimulate and inspire similar efforts by states and local governments on other urban rivers and waterfronts, such as the Hudson in New York. They are potentially the greatest single source of pleasure for those who live in most of our metropolitan areas.

TRAILS

The forgotten outdoorsmen of today are those who like to walk, hike, ride horseback or bicycle. For them we must have trails as well as highways. Nor should motor vehicles be permitted to tyrannize the more leisurely human traffic.

Old and young alike can participate. Our doctors recommend and encourage such activity for fitness and fun.

I am requesting, therefore, that the Secretary of the Interior work with his colleagues in the Federal Government and with state and local leaders and recommend to me a cooperative program to encourage a national system of trails, building up the more than hundred thousand miles of trails in our National Forests and Parks.

There are many new and exciting trail projects underway across the land. In Arizona, a county has arranged for miles of irrigation canal banks to be used by riders and hikers. In Illinois, an abandoned railroad right-of-way is being developed as a "Prairie Path." In New Mexico utility rights-of-way are used as public trails.

As with so much of our quest for beauty and quality, each community has opportunities for action. We can and should have an abundance of trails for walking, cycling and horseback riding, in and close to our cities. In the back country we need to copy the great Appalachian Trail in all parts of America, and to make full use of rights-of-way and other public paths.

POLLUTION

One aspect of the advance of civilization is the evolution of responsibility for disposal of waste. Over many generations society gradually developed techniques for this purpose. State and local governments, landlords and private citizens have been held responsible for ensuring that sewage and garbage did not menace health or contaminate the environment.

In the last few decades entire new categories of waste have come to plague and menace the American scene. These are the technological wastes -- the by-products of growth, industry, agriculture, and science. We cannot wait for slow evolution over generations to deal with them.

Pollution is growing at a rapid rate. Some pollutants are known to be harmful to health, while the effect of others is uncertain and unknown. In some cases we can control pollution with a larger effort. For other forms of pollution we still do not have effective means of control.

Pollution destroys beauty and menaces health. It cuts down on efficiency, reduces property values and raises taxes.

The longer we wait to act, the greater the dangers and the larger the problem.

Large-scale pollution of air and waterways is no respecter of political boundaries, and its effects extend far beyond those who cause it.

Air pollution is no longer confined to isolated places. This generation has altered the composition of the atmosphere on a global scale through radioactive materials and a steady increase in carbon dioxide from the burning of fossil fuels. Entire regional airsheds, crop plant environments, and river basins are heavy with noxious materials. Motor vehicles and home heating plants, municipal dumps and factories continually hurl pollutants into the air we breathe. Each day almost 50,000 tons of unpleasant and sometimes poisonous, sulfur dioxide are added to the atmosphere, and our automobiles produce almost 300,000 tons of other pollutants.

In Donora, Pennsylvania in 1948, and New York City in 1953 serious illness and some deaths were produced by sharp increases in air pollution. In New Orleans, epidemic outbreaks of asthmatic attacks are associated with air pollutants. Three-fourths of the eight million people in the Los Angeles area are annoyed by severe eye irritation much of the year. And our health authorities are increasingly concerned with the damaging effects of the continual breathing of polluted air by all our people in every city in the country.

In addition to its health effects, air pollution creates filth and gloom and depreciates property values of entire neighborhoods. The White House itself is being dirtied with soot from polluted air.

Every major river system is now polluted. Waterways that were once sources of pleasure and beauty and recreation are forbidden to human contact and objectionable to sight and smell. Furthermore, this pollution is costly, requiring expensive treatment for drinking water and inhibiting the operation and growth of industry.

In spite of the efforts and many accomplishments of the past, water pollution is spreading. And new kinds of problems are being added to the old:

-- Waterborne viruses, particularly hepatitis, are replacing typhoid fever as a significant health hazard.
-- Mass deaths of fish have occurred in rivers over-burdened with wastes.
-- Some of our rivers contain chemicals which, in concentrated form, produce abnormalities in animals.
-- Last summer 2,600 square miles of Lake Erie -- over a quarter of the entire Lake -- were almost without oxygen and unable to support life because of algae and plant growths, fed by pollution from cities and farms.

In many older cities storm drains and sanitary sewers are interconnected. As a result, mixtures of storm water and sanitary waste overflow during rains and discharge directly into streams, bypassing treatment works and causing heavy pollution.

In addition to our air and water we must, each and every day, dispose of a half billion pounds of solid waste. These wastes -- from discarded cans to discarded automobiles -- litter our country, harbor vermin, and menace our health. Inefficient and improper methods of disposal increase pollution of our air and streams.

Almost all these wastes and pollutions are the result of activities carried on for the benefit of man. A prime national goal must be an environment that is pleasing to the senses and healthy to live in.

Our Government is already doing much in this field. We have made significant progress. But more must be done.

Federal Government Activity

I am directing the heads of all agencies to improve measures to abate pollution caused by direct agency operation, contracts and cooperative agreements. Federal procurement practices must make sure that the Government equipment uses the most effective techniques for controlling pollution. The Administrator of General Services has already taken steps to assure that motor vehicles purchased by the Federal Government meet minimum standards of exhaust quality.

Clean Water

Enforcement authority must be strengthened to provide positive controls over the discharge of pollutants into our interstate or navigable waters. I recommend enactment of legislation to:

-- Provide, through the setting of effective water quality standards, combined with a swift and effective enforcement procedure, a national program to prevent water pollution at its source rather than attempting to cure pollution after it occurs.

-- Increase project grant ceilings and provide additional incentives for multi-municipal projects under the waste treatment facilities construction program.
-- Increase the ceilings for grants to state water pollution control programs.
-- Provide a new research and demonstration construction program leading to the solution of problems caused by the mixing of storm water runoff and sanitary wastes.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will undertake an intensive program to clean up the nation's most polluted rivers. With the cooperation of states and cities -- using the tools of regulation, grant and incentives -- we can bring the most serious problem of river pollution under control. We cannot afford to do less.

We will work with Canada to develop a pollution control program for the Great Lakes and other border waters.

Through an expanded program carried on by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and Interior, we will continue to seek effective and economical methods for controlling pollution from acid mine drainage.

To improve the quality of our waters will require the fullest cooperation of our state and local government. Working together, we can and will preserve and increase one of our most valuable national resources -- clean water.

Clean Air

The enactment of the Clean Air Act in December of 1963 represented a long step forward in our ability to understand and control the difficult problem of air pollution. The 1966 Budget request of 24 million dollars is almost double the amount spent on air pollution programs in the year prior to its enactment.

In addition, the Clean Air Act should be improved to permit the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to investigate potential air pollution problems before pollution happens, rather than having to wait until the damage occurs, as is now the case, and to make recommendations leading to the prevention of such pollution.

One of the principal unchecked sources of air pollution is the automobile. I intend to institute discussions with industry officials and other interested groups leading to an effective elimination or substantial reduction of pollution from liquid fueled motor vehicles.

Solid Wastes

Continuing technological progress and improvement in methods of manufacture, packaging and marketing of consumer products has resulted in an ever mounting increase of discarded material. We need to seek better solutions to the disposal of these wastes. I recommend legislation to:

-- Assist the states in developing comprehensive programs for some forms of solid waste disposal.
-- Provide for research and demonstration projects leading to more effective methods for disposing of or salvaging solid wastes.
-- Launch a concentrated attack on the accumulation of junk cars by increasing research in the Department of the Interior leading to use of metal from scrap cars where promising leads already exist.

Pesticides

Pesticides may affect living organisms wherever they occur.

In order that we may better understand the effects of these compounds, I have included increased funds in the Budget for use by the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior, and Health, Education, and Welfare to increase their research efforts on pesticides so they can give special attention to the flow of pesticides through the environment; study the means by which pesticides break down and disappear in nature; and to keep a constant check on the level of pesticides in our water, air, soil and food supply.

I am recommending additional funds for the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce contamination from toxic chemicals through intensified research, regulatory control, and educational programs.

The Secretary of Agriculture will soon submit legislation to tighten control over the manufacture and use of agricultural chemicals, including licensing and factory inspection of manufacturers, clearly placing the burden of proof of safety on the proponent of the chemical rather than on the Government.

Research Resources

Our needs for a new knowledge and increasing application of existing knowledge demand a greater supply of trained manpower and research resources.

A National Center for Environmental Health Sciences is being planned as a focal point for health research in this field. In addition, the 1966 budget includes funds for the establishment of university institutes to conduct research and training in environmental pollution problems.

Legislation recommended in my message on health has been introduced to increase federal support for specialized research facilities of a national or regional character. This proposal, aimed at health research needs generally, would assist in the solution of environmental health problems and I urge its passage.

We need legislation to provide to the Departments of Agriculture and the Interior authority for grants for research in environmental pollution control in their areas of responsibility. I have asked the Secretary of Interior to submit legislation to eliminate the ceiling on pesticide research.

Other Efforts

In addition to these needed actions, other proposals are undergoing active study.

I have directed the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, with the appropriate departments, to study the use of economic incentives as a technique to stimulate pollution prevention and abatement, and to recommend actions or legislation, if needed.

I have instructed the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and the Director of the Office of Science and Technology to explore the adequacy of the present organization of pollution control and research activities.

I have also asked the Director of the Office of Science and Technology and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to recommend the best way in which the Federal Government may direct efforts toward advancing our scientific understanding of natural plant and animal communities and their interaction with man and his activities.

The actions and proposals recommended in this message will take us a long way toward immediate reversal of the increase of pollutants in our environment. They will also give us time until new basic knowledge and trained manpower provide opportunities for more dramatic gains in the future.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

I intend to call a White House Conference on Natural Beauty to meet in mid-May of this year. Its chairman will be Mr. Laurance Rockefeller.

It is my hope that this Conference will produce new ideas and approaches for enhancing the beauty of America. Its scope will not be restricted to federal action. It will look for ways to help and encourage state and local government, institutions and private citizens, in their own efforts. It can serve as a focal point for the large campaign of public education which is needed to alert Americans to the danger to their natural heritage and to the need for action.

In addition to other subjects which this Conference will consider, I recommend the following subjects for discussion in depth:

-- Automobile junkyards. I am convinced that analysis of the technology and economics can help produce a creative solution to this vexing problem. The Bureau of Mines of the Interior Department can contribute technical advice to the conference, as can the scrap industry and the steel industry.
-- Underground installation of utility transmission lines. Further research is badly needed to enable us to cope with this problem.
-- The greatest single force that shapes the American landscape is private economic development. Our taxation policies should not penalize or discourage conservation and the preservation of beauty.
-- Ways in which the Federal Government can, through information and technical assistance, help communities and states in their own programs of natural beauty.

-- The possibilities of a national tree planting program carried on by government at every level, and private groups and citizens.

CONCLUSION

In my thirty-three years of public life I have seen the American system move to conserve the natural and human resources of our land.

TVA transformed an entire region that was "depressed." The rural electrification cooperatives brought electricity to lighten the burdens of rural America. We have seen the forests replanted by the CCC's, and watched Gifford Pinchot's sustained yield concept take hold on forestlands.

It is true that we have often been careless with our natural bounty. At times we have paid a heavy price for this neglect. But once our people were aroused to the danger, we have acted to preserve our resources for the enrichment of our country and the enjoyment of future generations.

The beauty of our land is a natural resource. Its preservation is linked to the inner prosperity of the human spirit.

The tradition of our past is equal to today's threat to that beauty. Our land will be attractive tomorrow only if we organize for action and rebuild and reclaim the beauty we inherited. Our stewardship will be judged by the foresight with which we carry out these programs. We must rescue our cities and countryside from blight with the same purpose and vigor with which, in other areas, we moved to save the forests and the soil.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

PRESIDENT REQUESTS 'MEDICARE', OTHER HEALTH PROGRAMS

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 7 Health Message to Congress:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

In 1787, Thomas Jefferson wrote that, "Without health there is no happiness. An attention to health, then, should take the place of every other object."

That priority has remained fixed in both the private and public values of our society through generations of Americans since.

Our rewards have been immeasurably bountiful. "An attention to health" -- of the individual, the family, the community and the nation -- has contributed to the vitality and efficiency of our system as well as to the happiness and prosperity of our people.

Today, at this point in our history, we are privileged to contemplate new horizons of national advance and achievement in many sectors. But it is imperative that we give first attention to our opportunities -- and our obligations -- for advancing the nation's health. For the health of our people is, inescapably, the foundation for fulfillment of all our aspirations.

In these years of the 1960s, we live as beneficiaries of this century's great -- and continuing -- revolution of medical knowledge and capabilities. Smallpox, malaria, yellow fever and typhus are conquered in this country. Infant deaths have been reduced by half every two decades. Poliomyelitis, which took 3,154 lives so recently as 1952, cost only five lives in 1964. Over the brief span of the past two decades, death rates have been reduced for influenza by 88 percent, tuberculosis by 87 percent, rheumatic fever by 90 percent.

A baby born in America today has a life expectancy half again as long as those born in the year the Twentieth Century began.

The successes of the century are many.

The pace of medical progress is rapid.

The potential for the future is unlimited.

But we must not allow the modern miracles of medicine to mesmerize us. The work most needed to advance the nation's health will not be done for us by miracles. We must undertake that work ourselves through practical, prudent and patient programs -- to put more firmly in place the foundation for the healthiest, happiest and most hopeful society in the history of man.

Our first concern must be to assure that the advance of medical knowledge leaves none behind. We can -- and we must -- strive now to assure the availability of and accessibility to the best health care for all Americans, regardless of age or geography or economic status.

With this as our goal, we must strengthen our nation's health facilities and services, assure the adequacy and quality of our health manpower, continue to assist our states and communities in meeting their health responsibilities, and respond alertly to the new hazards of our new and complex environment.

We must, certainly, continue and intensify our health research and research facilities. Despite all that has been done, we cannot be complacent before the facts that:

-- Forty-eight million people now living will become victims of cancer.
-- Nearly 15 million people suffer from heart disease and this, together with strokes, accounts for more than half the deaths in the United States each year.
-- Twelve million people suffer arthritis and rheumatic disease and 10 million are burdened with neurological disorders.
-- Five and one-half million Americans are afflicted by mental retardation and the number increases by 126,000 new cases each year.

In our struggle against disease, great advances have been made, but the battle is far from won. While that battle will not end in our lifetime -- or any times to come -- we have the high privilege and high promise of making longer strides forward now than any other generation of Americans.

The measures I am outlining today will carry us forward in the oldest tradition of our society -- to give "an attention to health" for all our people. Our advances, thus far, have been most dramatic in the field of health knowledge. We are challenged now to give attention to advances in the field of health care -- and this is the emphasis of the recommendations I am placing before you at this time.

I. REMOVING BARRIERS TO HEALTH CARE

In this century, medical scientists have done much to improve human health and prolong human life. Yet as these advances come, vital segments of our populace are being left behind -- behind barriers of age, economics, geography or community resources. Today the political community is challenged to help all our people surmount these needless barriers to the enjoyment of the promise and reality of better health.

A. Hospital Insurance for the Aged. Thirty years ago, the American people made a basic decision that the later years of life should not be years of despondency and drift. The result was enactment of our Social Security program, a program now fixed as a valued part of our national life. Since World War II, there has been increasing awareness of the fact that the full value of Social Security would not be realized unless provision were made to deal with the problem of costs of illnesses among our older citizens.

I believe this year is the year when, with the sure knowledge of public support, the Congress should enact a hospital insurance program for the aged.

The facts of the need are well and widely known:

-- Four out of five persons 65 or older have a disability or chronic disease.
-- People over 65 go to the hospital more frequently and stay twice as long as younger people.
-- Health costs for them are twice as high as for the young.

Where health insurance is available it is usually associated with an employer-employee plan. However, since most of our older people are not employed they are usually not eligible under these plans.

-- Almost half of the elderly have no health insurance at all.

-- The average retired couple cannot afford the cost of adequate health protection under private health insurance.

I ask that our Social Security system -- proved and tested by three decades of successful operation -- be extended to finance the cost of basic health services. In this way, the specter of catastrophic hospital bills can be lifted from the lives of our older citizens. I again strongly urge the Congress to enact a hospital insurance program for the aged. Such a program should:

-- Be financed under Social Security by regular, modest contributions during working years;
-- Provide protection against the costs of hospital and post-hospital extended care, home nursing services, and outpatient diagnostic services;
-- Provide similar protection to those who are not now covered by Social Security, with the costs being paid from the administrative budget;
-- Clearly indicate that the plan in no way interferes with the patient's complete freedom to select his doctor or hospital.

Like our existing Social Security cash retirement benefits, this hospital insurance plan will be a basic protection plan. It should cover the heaviest cost elements in serious illnesses. In addition, we should encourage private insurance to provide supplementary protection.

I consider this measure to be of utmost urgency. Compassion and reason dictate that this logical extension of our proven Social Security system will supply the prudent, feasible and dignified way to free the aged from the fear of financial hardship in the event of illness.

Also, I urge all states to provide adequate medical assistance under the existing Kerr-Mills program for the aged who cannot afford to meet the noninsured costs.

B. Better Health Services for Children and Youth. America's tradition of compassion for the aged is matched by our traditional devotion to our most priceless resource of all -- our young. Today, far more than many realize, there are great and growing needs among our children for better health services.

-- Acute illness strikes children under 15 nearly twice as frequently as it does adults.
-- One in 5 children under age 17 is afflicted with a chronic ailment.
-- Three out of every 100 children suffer some form of paralysis or orthopedic impairment.
-- At least 2,000,000 children are mentally retarded, with a higher concentration of them from poor families.
-- Four million children are emotionally disturbed.
-- At age 15, the average child has more than 10 decayed teeth.

If the health of our nation is to be substantially improved in the years to come, we must improve the care of the health of our 75 million preschool and school-age children and youth.

There is much to do if we are to make available the medical and dental services our rising generation needs. Nowhere are the needs greater than for the 15 million children of families who live in poverty.

-- Children in families with incomes of less than $2,000 are able to visit a doctor only half as frequently as those in families with incomes of more than $7,000.
-- Public assistance payments for medical services to the 3 million needy children receiving Dependent Children's benefits through the nation average only $2.80 a month, and in some states such medical benefits are not provided at all.
-- Poor families increasingly are forced to turn to overcrowded hospital emergency rooms and to overburdened city clinics as their only resource to meet their routine health needs.

Military entrance examinations reveal the consequences. Half of those rejected cannot pass the medical tests. Three-fourths of them would benefit from treatment, and earlier treatment would greatly increase recovery and decrease life-long disability.

The states and localities bear the major responsibility for providing modern medical care to our children and youth. But the Federal Government can help. I recommend legislation to:

-- Increase the authorizations for maternal and child health and crippled children's services, earmarking funds for project grants to provide health screening and diagnosis for children of preschool and school age, as well as treatment and follow-up care services for disabled children and youth. This should include funds to help defray the operational costs of university-affiliated mental retardation clinical centers. Provisions should also be made for the training of personnel who will operate medical facilities for children.
-- Broaden the public assistance program to permit specific federal participation in paying costs of medical and dental care for children in medically needy families, similar to the Kerr-Mills program for the aged.
-- Extend the grant programs for (a) family health services and clinics for domestic agricultural migratory workers and their children and (b) community vaccination assistance.

C. Improved Community Mental Health Services. Mental illness afflicts one out of ten Americans, fills nearly one-half of all the hospital beds in the nation, and costs $3 billion annually. Fortunately, we are entering a new era in the prevention, treatment, and care of mental illness. Mere custodial care of patients in large isolated asylums is clearly no longer appropriate. Most patients can be cared for and cured in their own communities.

An important beginning toward community preparation has been made through the legislation enacted by the 88th Congress authorizing aid for constructing community mental health centers. But facilities alone cannot assure services.

-- It has been estimated that at least 10,000 more psychiatrists are needed.
-- Few communities have the funds to support adequate programs, particularly during the first years.
-- Communities with the greatest needs hesitate to build centers without being able to identify the source of operating funds.
-- Most of the people in need are children, the aged, or patients with low incomes.

I therefore recommend legislation to authorize a 5-year program of grants for the initial costs of personnel to man community mental health centers which offer comprehensive services.

D. A New Life for the Disabled. Today, we are rehabilitating about 120,000 disabled persons each year. I recommend a stepped-up program to overcome this costly waste of human resources. My 1966 budget will propose increased funds to rehabilitate an additional 25,000.

Our goal should be at least 200,000 a year. I recommend legislation to authorize:

-- Project grants to help states expand their services.
-- Special federal matching so that rehabilitative services can be provided to a greater number of the mentally retarded and other seriously disabled individuals.
-- Construction and modernization of workshops and rehabilitation centers.

II. STRENGTHENING THE NATION'S HEALTH FACILITIES AND SERVICES

In our urbanized society today, the availability of health care depends uniquely upon the availability and accessibility of modern facilities, located in convenient and efficient places, and on well organized and adequately supported services. The lack of such facilities and services is, of itself, a barrier to good health care.

A. Multi-purpose Regional Medical Complexes. In this century, we have made more advance than in all other centuries toward overcoming diseases which have taken the heaviest toll of human life. Today we are challenged to meet and master the three killers which alone account for 7 out of 10 deaths in the United States each year -- heart disease, cancer and stroke. The Commission on Heart Disease, Cancer and Stroke has pointed the way for us toward that goal.

The newest and most effective diagnostic methods and the most recent and most promising methods of treatment often require equipment or skills of great scarcity and expense such as,

-- open heart surgery,
-- advanced and very high voltage radiation therapy,
-- advanced disease detection methods.

It is not necessary for each hospital or clinic to have such facilities, equipment, or services, but it is essential that every patient requiring such specialized and expensive procedures and services have access to them. Multi-purpose medical complexes can meet these needs. They would:

-- speed the application of research knowledge to patient care, so as to turn otherwise hollow laboratory triumphs into health victories,
-- save thousands of lives now needlessly taken annually by the three great killers -- heart disease, cancer and stroke -- and by other major diseases.

A plan to improve our attack upon these major causes of death and disability should become a part of the fabric of our regional and community health services. The services provided under this plan will help the practicing physician keep in touch with the latest medical knowledge and by making available to him the latest techniques, specialized knowledge, and the most efficient methods.

To meet these objectives, such complexes should:

-- Be regional in scope.
-- Provide services for a variety of diseases -- heart disease, cancer, stroke, and other major illnesses.
-- Be affiliated with medical schools, teaching hospitals and medical centers.
-- Be supported by diagnostic services in community hospitals.
-- Provide diagnosis and treatment of patients, together with research and teaching in a coordinated system.
-- Permit clinical trial of advanced techniques and drugs.

Medical complexes -- consisting of regional organizations of medical schools, teaching hospitals, and treatment centers tied into community diagnostic and treatment facilities -- represent a new kind of organization for providing coordinated teaching, research and patient care. When we consider that the economic cost of heart disease alone amounts to 540,000 lost man years annually -- worth some $2.5 billion -- the urgency and value of effective action is unmistakable.

Action on this new approach, stemming from recommendations of the Commission on Heart Disease, Cancer and Stroke, will provide significant improvements in many fields of medicine.

I recommend legislation to authorize a 5-year program of project grants to develop multi-purpose regional medical complexes for an all out attack on heart disease, cancer, stroke, and other major diseases.

B. Improved Services for the Mentally Retarded. Mental retardation in any individual is a life-long problem of the most serious nature for the family and for the community. But we know today that the problem need not and must not lead to tragic hopelessness. Much is being done to provide a decent, dignified place in society for these unfortunate individuals.

The 88th Congress provided a substantial foundation for building an effective national program for the prevention of mental retardation and care of the mentally retarded. Under this authority, grants are authorized:

-- For construction of mental retardation research centers, community mental retardation centers, and university-affiliated mental retardation centers.
-- For planning by all the states of comprehensive action to combat mental retardation at the state and community levels.

The 1966 budget includes $282 million -- a $40 million increase -- for these programs and other mental retardation services, including preventive activities and the training of teachers of the retarded. I urge that this full amount be appropriated.

Extensive resources and programs need to be developed in the states and communities to prevent mental retardation and to care for the mentally retarded. The existing authority for planning grants will end on June 30, 1965. The developmental needs and effective utilization of the construction grants require followup action.

I recommend the enactment of mental retardation program development grants for 2 additional years to help the states continue this essential work.

C. Modernization of Health Facilities. Great progress has been made throughout the nation in the provision of new general hospitals under the Hill-Burton program. But relatively little assistance has been available for modernization of the older hospitals, found particularly in our large cities. Without aid, deterioration threatens and rapid scientific and technical change is passing by these essential links to health care for millions of our people.

The 1966 Budget will include funds for a greatly increased hospital modernization effort as well as for expansion in the number and quality of nursing homes. I urge the Congress to approve the full amount requested for each of these purposes.

D. Aid for Group Practice Facilities. New approaches are needed to stretch the supply of medical specialists and to provide a wider range of medical services in the communities. The growth of voluntary, comprehensive group practice programs has demonstrated the feasibility of grouping health services for the mutual benefit of physicians and patients by:

-- Integrating the burgeoning medical specialties into an efficient and economic system of patient care.
-- Reducing the incidence of hospitalization which may now occur because there are few alternative centers for specialized care.

The initial capital requirements for group practice are substantial, and funds are not now sufficiently available to stimulate the expansion and establishment of group practice. To facilitate and encourage this desirable trend, I recommend legislation to authorize a program of direct loans and loan guarantees to assist voluntary associations in the construction and equipping of facilities for comprehensive group practice.

III. MANPOWER FOR THE HEALTH SERVICES

The advance of our nation's health in this century has, in the final measure, been possible because of the unique quality and fortunate quantity of men and women serving in our health professions. Americans respect and are grateful for our doctors, dentists, nurses, and others who serve our nation's health. But it is clear that the future requires our support now to increase the quantity and assure the continuing high quality of such vital personnel.

In all sectors of health care, the need for trained personnel continues to outstrip the supply:

-- At present, the United States has 290,000 physicians. In a decade, we shall need 346,000.

Today we are keeping pace with our needs largely because of the influx of numbers of foreign-trained doctors. Last year 1,600 came into the United States, the equivalent of the output from 16 medical schools and 21% of our medical school graduates.

-- Population growth has badly outpaced the increase in dentists and the shortage of dentists is now acute.

To begin to meet the nation's health needs, the number of new physicians graduated each year must increase at least 50 percent by 1975, and the output of new dentists by 100 percent.

The Health Professions Educational Assistance Act of 1963, authorizing grants to schools for construction of medical and other health education schools and loans to students, will help meet this problem. The magnitude of the need is demonstrated by the response:

-- 90 applications have been received from medical and dental schools, requesting $247 million in federal aid for construction.
-- Only $100 million is available in 1965; and the full authorization for 1966, which I will shortly request in the budget I am submitting, will provide $75 million more.

In the light of these needs, I urge the Congress to appropriate the full amount authorized and requested for the Health Professions Educational Assistance Act Program.

While we must build new medical and dental schools, we must also retain and sustain the ones we have. To be neglectful of such schools would be wasteful folly.

We must face the fact that high operating costs and shortages of operating funds are jeopardizing our health professions educational system. Tuition and fees paid by medical and dental students meet less than half the institutional costs of their education. Several underfinanced medical and dental schools are threatened with failure to meet educational standards. New schools are slow to start, even when construction funds are available, due to lack of operating funds.

I therefore recommend legislation to authorize:

-- formula grants to help cover basic operating costs of our health profession schools in order that they may significantly expand both their capacity and the equality of their educational programs.

-- project grants to enable health profession schools to experiment and demonstrate new and improved educational methods.

Traditionally, our medical profession has attracted outstanding young talent and we must be certain that this tradition is not compromised. We must draw the best available talent into the medical profession. Half of last June's medical school graduates came from families with incomes of over $10,000 a year. The high costs of medical school must not deny access to the medical profession for able youths from low-and middle-income families.

I therefore recommend legislation to authorize scholarships for medical and dental students who would otherwise not be able to enter or complete such training.

Looking to the Future

We must also look to the future in planning to meet the health manpower requirements of the nation.

Unmet health needs are already large. American families are demanding and expecting more and better health services. In the past decades the proportion of our gross national product devoted to health has increased by more than 50%. The trend is still upward. If we are to meet our future needs and raise the health of the nation, we must:

-- improve utilization of available professional health personnel;

-- expand the use and training of technicians and ancillary health workers through special schools and under the Vocational Education Act and Manpower Development and Training Act programs;

-- expand and improve training programs for professional and for supporting health personnel;

-- plan ahead to meet requirements for which the lead time is often 10 years or more.

With these objectives in mind, I have asked the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to develop a long-range health manpower program for the nation and to recommend to me the steps which should be taken to put it into effect.

IV. HEALTH RESEARCH AND RESEARCH FACILITIES

Two decades ago this nation decided that its Government should be a strong supporter of the health research to advance the well-being of its people. This year that support amounts to more than two-thirds of the total national expenditure of $1.5 billion for health research.

Continued growth of this research is necessary and the 1966 Budget includes:

-- 10% growth in expenditures for health research and for the related training.

-- Funds to begin an automated system for processing the exploding volume of information on drugs and other chemicals related to health.

Health research, no less than patient care, requires adequate facilities. Over the past eight years the Health Research Facilities Act has been highly successful in helping provide research facilities to universities and other nonprofit institutions. Federal grants of $320 million to 990 construction projects have generated over $500 million in matching institutional dollars.

This authority expires on June 30, 1966, and I recommend that it be extended for five years with an increased authorization and with a larger federal share for specialized research facilities of a national or regional character.

V. HEALTH GRANTS AND PROTECTION MEASURES

Our complex modern society is creating health hazards never before encountered. The pollution of our environment is assuming such important proportion I shall shortly send to the Congress a special message dealing with this challenge.

But the protection of the public health also requires action on other fronts.

A. Health Grants to Communities and States. In safeguarding and advancing the nation's health, states and communities have long had special responsibilities. General and special purpose health grants have proved an effective means of strengthening the Federal Government's partnership with them in improving the public health.

I have directed the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to study these programs thoroughly and to recommend to me necessary legislation to increase their usefulness.

Authorizations for many of these programs expire at the close of fiscal year 1966. So that a thorough review may be made, I recommend that the Congress extend the authorizations through June 30, 1967.

B. Consumers Health Protection. Modernization of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act is imperative if our health protection program is to keep pace with the technological and industrial advances of recent years.

The health of all Americans depends on the reliability and safety of the products of the:

-- food industry which alone generates nearly $100 billion in retail sales each year.

-- drug industry with sales reaching $6 billion.

-- cosmetic industry which markets $2.5 billion of products.

All must be operated under the highest standards of purity and safety.

Yet, despite recent improvements in food and drug legislation, serious gaps in our ability to protect the consumer still exist. The law should be strengthened to provide adequate authority in the regulation of non-prescription drugs, medical devices, cosmetics, and food.

Narcotics are not alone among the hazardous, habit-forming drugs subject to improper use. Barbiturates, amphetamines, and other drugs have harmful effects when improperly used. Widespread traffic resulting from inadequate controls over the manufacture, distribution, and sale of these drugs is creating a growing problem which must be met. We must also counter the threat from counterfeit drugs.

I recommend legislation to bring the production and distribution of barbiturates, amphetamines, and other psycho-toxic drugs under more effective control.

For the fuller protection of our families, I recommend legislation to require:

-- Adequate labeling of hazardous substances.

-- Safety regulation of cosmetics and therapeutic devices by premarketing examination by the Food and Drug Administration.

-- Authority to seize counterfeit drugs at their source.

CONCLUSION

I believe we have come to a rare moment of opportunity and challenge in the evolution of our society. In the message I have presented to you -- and in other messages I shall be sending -- my purpose is to outline the attainable horizons of a greater society which a confident and prudent people can begin to build for the future.

Whatever we aspire to do together, our success in those enterprises -- and our enjoyment of the fruits that result -- will rest finally upon the health of our people. We cannot and we will not overcome all the barriers -- or surmount all the obstacles -- in one effort, no matter how intensive. But in all the sectors I have mentioned we are already behind our capability and our potential. Further delay will only compound our problems and deny our people the health and happiness that could be theirs.

The Eighty-eighth Congress wrote a proud and significant record of accomplishment in the field of health legislation. I have every confidence that this Congress will write an even finer record that will be remembered with honor by generations of Americans to come.

Providing for the Common Defense, A Message on U.S. Preparedness

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 18 message to Congress on defense:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

One hundred seventy-five years ago, in his first Annual Message, President Washington told the Congress:

> "Among the many interesting objects which will engage your attention, that of providing for the common defense will merit particular regard. To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

For the Eighty-ninth Congress -- as for the First Congress -- those words of the first President remain a timely charge.

In the twentieth year since the end of mankind's most tragic war, you and I are beginning new terms of service. The danger of war remains ever with us. But if the hope of peace is sturdier than at any other time in these two decades, it is because we -- and free men everywhere -- have proved preparedness to be "the most effectual means of preserving peace."

Arms alone cannot assure the security of any society or the preservation of any peace. The health and education of our people, the vitality of our economy, the equality of our justice, the vision and fulfillment of our aspirations are all factors in America's strength and well-being.

Today we can walk the road of peace because we have the strength we need. We have built that strength with courage. We have employed it with care. We have maintained it with conviction that the reward of our resolution will be peace and freedom.

We covet no territory, we seek no dominion, we fear no nation, we despise no people. With our arms we seek to shelter the peace of mankind.

In this spirit, then, I wish to consider with you the state of our defenses, the policies we pursue, and -- as Commander in Chief -- to offer recommendations on our course for the future.

I.

THE STATE OF OUR DEFENSES

I am able to report to you that the United States today is stronger militarily than at any other time in our peacetime history.

Under our free and open society, the American people have succeeded in building a strength of arms greater than that ever assembled by any other nation and greater now than that of any combination of adversaries.

This strength is not the handiwork of any one Administration. Our force in being and in place reflects the continuity and constancy of America's purpose under four Administrations and eight Congresses -- and this responsible conduct of our system is, of itself, a source of meaningful strength.

For the past four years, the focus of our national effort has been upon assuring an indisputable margin of superiority for our defenses. I can report today that effort has succeeded.

- -- Our strategic nuclear power on alert has increased three-fold in four years.
- -- Our tactical nuclear power has been greatly expanded.
- -- Our forces have been made as versatile as the threats to peace are various.
- -- Our Special Forces, trained for the undeclared, twilight wars of today, have been expanded eight-fold.
- -- Our combat-ready Army divisions have been increased by 45 percent.
- -- Our Marine Corps has been increased by 15,000 men.
- -- Our airlift capacity to move these troops rapidly anywhere in the world has been doubled.
- -- Our tactical Air Force firepower to support these divisions in the field has increased 100 percent.

This strength has been developed to support our basic military strategy -- a strategy of strength and readiness, capable of countering aggression with appropriate force from ballistic missiles to guerrilla bands.

Our forces are balanced and ready, mobile and diverse. Our allies trust our strength and our adversaries respect it. But the challenge is unceasing. The forms of conflict become more subtle and more complex every day. We must -- and we shall -- adapt our forces and our tactics to fulfill our purposes.

If our military strength is to be fully usable in times requiring adaptation and response to changing challenges, that strength must be so organized and so managed that it may be employed with planned precision as well as promptness.

The state of our defenses is enhanced today because we have established an orderly system for informed decision-making and planning.

- -- Our planning and budgeting programs are now conducted on a continuing five-year basis and cover our total military requirements.
- -- Our national strategy, military force structure, contingency plans and defense budget are all now related in an integrated plan.
- -- Our orderly decision-making now combines our best military judgment with the most advanced scientific and analytical techniques.
- -- Our military policy under the Secretary of Defense is now more closely tied than ever to the conduct of foreign policy under the Secretary of State.

Thus, we now have the ability to provide and maintain a balanced, flexible military force, capable of meeting the changing requirements of a constantly changing challenge.

II.

BASIC DEFENSE POLICIES

1. Four years ago, President John F. Kennedy stated to the Congress and the world, "The primary purpose of our arms is peace, not war." That is still their purpose. We are armed, not for conquest, but to insure our own security and to encourage the settlement of international differences by peaceful processes.

We are not a militaristic people, and we have long denounced the use of force in pursuit of national ambition. We seek to avoid a nuclear holocaust in which there can be neither victory nor victors. But we shall never again return to a world where peace-loving men must stand helpless in the path of those who, heedless of destruction and human suffering, take up war and oppression in pursuit of their own ambitions.

2. The strength of our Strategic Retaliatory Forces must deter nuclear attack on the United States or our Allies.

The forces we now have give that capability.

The United States has --

- -- More than 850 land-based Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles
- -- More than 300 nuclear-armed missiles in POLARIS submarines
- -- More than 900 strategic bombers, half of them ready at all times to be airborne within 15 minutes.

These strategic forces on alert are superior -- in number and in quality -- to those of any other nation.

To maintain our superiority, the immediate future will see further increases in our missile strength, as well as concentration on further technological improvements and continuing vigorous research and development.

We are --

- -- Requesting more than $300 million to continue our program for extending the life and improving the capabilities of our B-52 strategic bombers, while eliminating two squadrons of B-52Bs, the earliest -- and least effective -- model of this plane.

-- Continuing development of engines and other systems for advanced aircraft to retain our option for a new manned bomber, should the need arise.
-- Continuing deployment of the SR-71, the world's fastest airplane, which will enter the active forces this year.
-- Continuing installation of the new over-the-horizon radars, giving us almost instantaneous knowledge of ballistic missiles launched for attack.
-- Continuing procurement and deployment of our latest strategic missiles, MINUTEMAN II and POLARIS A-3, greatly extending the range, accuracy, and striking power of the strategic forces.
-- Replacing older, more costly, and vulnerable elements of our strategic forces. The out-dated ATLAS and TITAN I missiles will be retired this year and the remainder of the B-47 forces will be phased out during Fiscal Year 1966.

All this is part of a continuing process. There will always be changes, replacing the old with the new.

Major new developments in strategic weapon systems we propose to begin this year are:

-- A new missile system, the POSEIDON, to increase the striking power of our missile carrying nuclear submarines. The POSEIDON missile will have double the payload of the highly successful POLARIS A-3. The increased accuracy and flexibility of the POSEIDON will permit its use effectively against a broader range of possible targets and give added insurance of penetration of enemy defenses.
-- A series of remarkable new payloads for strategic missiles. These include: penetration aids, to assure that the missile reaches its target through any defense; guidance and re-entry vehicle designs, to increase many-fold the effectiveness of our missiles against various kinds of targets; and methods of reporting the arrival of our missiles on target, up to and even including the time of explosion.
-- A new Short Range Attack Missile (SRAM) that can, if needed, be deployed operationally with the B-52 or other bombers. This aerodynamic missile -- a vast improvement over existing systems -- would permit the bomber to attack a far larger number of targets and to do so from beyond the range of their local defenses.

3. The strength, deployment, and mobility of our forces must be such that, combined with those of our allies, they can prevent the erosion of the Free World by limited, non-nuclear aggression.

Our non-nuclear forces must be strong enough to insure that we are never limited to nuclear weapons alone as our sole option in the face of aggression. These forces must contribute to our strategy of responding flexibly and appropriately to varied threats to peace.

I have already cited the increases achieved during recent years in the strength and mobility of our Army, Navy, Marines, and of our air transport which gets them to the scene of battle and the tactical aircraft which support them there. These forces, furthermore, are now better balanced, better integrated, and under more effective command and control than ever before. We shall maintain our present high degree of readiness.

We must further improve our ability to concentrate our power rapidly in a threatened area, so as to halt aggression early and swiftly. We plan expansion of our airlift, improvement of our sealift, and more pre-positioned equipment to enable us to move our troops overseas in a matter of days, rather than weeks.

To this end, we will:

-- Start development of the C-5A Cargo Transport. This extraordinary aircraft capable of carrying 750 passengers will bring a new era of air transportation. It will represent a dramatic step forward in the worldwide mobility of our forces and in American leadership in the field of aviation.
-- Build fast deployment cargo ships, capable of delivering military equipment quickly to any theatre. This represents a new concept in the rapid deployment of military forces. These ships will have a gas turbine engine propulsion system, a major advance in marine engineering for ships of this size. Such vessels will be deployed around the globe, able to begin deliveries of heavy combat-ready equipment into battle zones within days or even hours.
-- Increase our Forward Floating Depot Ships stationed close to areas of potential crisis.
-- Begin large-scale procurement of the revolutionary swept wing F-111 and the new A-7 Navy attack aircraft.

We will also begin construction of four new nuclear-powered attack submarines, and ten new destroyer escorts. And we will continue to develop a much smaller, more efficient, nuclear power plant for possible use in our future aircraft carriers.

4. While confident that our present strength will continue to deter a thermonuclear war, we must always be alert to the possibilities for limiting destruction which might be inflicted upon our people, cities and industry -- should such a war be forced upon us.

Many proposals have been advanced for means of limiting damage and destruction to the United States in the event of a thermonuclear war. Shifting strategy and advancing technology make the program of building adequate defenses against nuclear attack extremely complex.

Decisions with respect to further limitation of damage require complex calculations concerning the effectiveness of many interrelated elements. Any comprehensive program would involve the expenditure of tens of billions of dollars. We must not shrink from any expense that is justified by its effectiveness, but we must not hastily expend vast sums on massive programs that do not meet this test.

It is already clear that without fall-out shelter protection for our citizens, all defense weapons lose much of their effectiveness in saving lives. This also appears to be the least expensive way of saving millions of lives, and the one which has clear value even without other systems. We will continue our existing programs and start a program to increase the total inventory of shelters through a survey of private homes and other small structures.

We shall continue the research and development which retains the options to deploy an anti-ballistic missile system, and manned interceptors and surface-to-air missiles against bombers.

5. Our military forces must be so organized and directed that they can be used in a measured, controlled, and deliberate way as a versatile instrument to support our foreign policy.

Military and civilian leaders alike are unanimous in their conviction that our armed might is and always must be so controlled as to permit measured response in whatever crises may confront us.

We have made dramatic improvements in our ability to communicate with and command our forces, both at the national level and at the level of the theatre commanders. We have established a National Military Command System, with the most advanced electronic and communications equipment, to gather and present the military information necessary for top level management of crises and to assure the continuity of control through all levels of command. Its survival under attack is insured by a system of airborne, shipborne and other command posts, and a variety of alternative protected communications.

We have developed and procured the Post Attack Command Control System of the Strategic Air Command, to assure continued control of our strategic forces following a nuclear attack.

We have installed new safety procedures and systems designed to guarantee that our nuclear weapons are not used except at the direction of the highest national authority.

This year we are requesting funds to extend similar improvements in the survivability and effectiveness of our command and control to other commands in our overseas theatres.

6. America will continue to be first in the use of science and technology to insure the security of its people.

We are currently investing more than $6 billion per year for military Research and Development. Among other major developments, our investment has recently produced anti-satellite systems that can intercept and destroy armed satellites that might be launched, and such revolutionary new aircraft as the F-111 fighter-bomber and the SR-71 supersonic reconnaissance aircraft. Our investment has effected an enormous improvement in the design of anti-ballistic missile systems. We will pursue our program for the development of the NIKE-X anti-missile system, to permit deployment of this anti-ballistic missile should the national security require. Research will continue on even more advanced anti-missile components and concepts.

About $2 billion a year of this program is invested in innovations in technology and in experimental programs. Thus, we provide full play for the ingenuity and inventiveness of the best scientific and technical talent in our nation and the Free World.

American science, industry, and technology are foremost in the world. Their resources represent a prime asset to our national security.

7. Our soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines, from whom we ask so much, are the cornerstone of our military might.

The success of all our policies depends upon our ability to attract, develop fully, utilize and retain the talents of outstanding men and women in the military services. We have sought to improve housing conditions for military families and educational opportunities for military personnel.

Since 1961, we have proposed -- and the Congress has authorized -- the largest military pay increases in our history, totaling more than $2 billion.

To ensure that the pay of military personnel, and indeed of all government employees, retains an appropriate relation to the compensation of other elements of our society, we will review their pay annually. The procedures for this review will be discussed in my budget message.

It is imperative that our men in uniform have the necessary background and training to keep up with the complexities of the everchanging military, political, and technical problems they face each day. To insure this, the Secretary of Defense is undertaking a study of military education to make certain that the education available to our service men and women at their Academies, at their War Colleges and at the Command and Staff Colleges, is excellent in its quality.

In recent years large numbers of volunteers have been rejected by the military services because of their failure to meet certain mental or physical standards, even though many of their deficiencies could have been corrected. To broaden the opportunity for service and increase the supply of potentially qualified volunteers, the Army is planning to initiate an experimental program of military training, education and physical rehabilitation for men who fail at first to meet minimum requirements for service. This pilot program, which will involve about 10,000 men in 1965, will establish how many of these young volunteers can be upgraded so as to qualify for service.

8. Our citizen-soldiers must be the best organized, best equipped reserve forces in the world. We must make certain that this force, which has served our country so well from the time of the Revolution to the Berlin and Cuban crises of recent years, keeps pace with the changing demands of our national security.

To this end, we are taking steps to realign our Army Reserves and National Guard to improve significantly their combat-readiness and effectiveness in times of emergency. This realignment will bring our Army Reserve structure into balance with our contingency war plans and will place all remaining units of the Army reserve forces in the National Guard. At the same time, by eliminating units for which there is no military requirement, we will realize each year savings approximating $150 million. Under our plan, all units will be fully equipped with combat-ready equipment and will be given training in the form of monthly week-end drills that will greatly increase their readiness. Under the revised organization, both the old and the new units of the National Guard, as well as individual trainees who remain in the Reserves, will make a much greater and continuing contribution to our national security.

We shall continue to study our reserve forces and take whatever action is necessary to increase their combat effectiveness.

9. The Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary of Defense must continue to receive the best professional military advice available to the leaders of any government in the world.

The importance of a strong line of command running from the Commander-in-Chief to the Secretary of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Unified and Specified Commanders in the field has been repeatedly demonstrated during recent years.

The Secretary of Defense will present to you certain recommendations to strengthen the Joint Staff.

10. We will strengthen our military alliances, assist freedom-loving peoples, and continue our Military Assistance Program.

It is essential to continue to strengthen our alliances with other free and independent nations. We reaffirm our unwavering determination that efforts to divide and conquer free men shall not be successful in our time. We shall continue to assist those who struggle to preserve their own independence.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is a strong shield against aggression. We reaffirm our belief in the necessity of unified planning and execution of strategy. We invite our NATO allies to work with us in developing better methods for mutual consultation and joint strategic study. We shall continue to seek ways to bind the alliance even more strongly together by sharing the tasks of defense through collective action.

We shall continue our program of military and economic assistance to Allies elsewhere in the world and to those nations struggling against covert aggression in the form of externally directed, undeclared guerrilla warfare. In Southeast Asia, our program remains unchanged. From 1950, the United States has demonstrated its commitment to the freedom, independence, and neutrality of Laos by strengthening the economic and military security of that nation. The problem of Laos is the refusal of the Communist forces to honor the Geneva accords into which they entered in 1962. We shall continue to support the legitimate government of that country. The Geneva Accords established the right of Laos to be left alone in peace.

Similarly, the problem of Viet Nam is the refusal of Communist forces to honor their agreement of 1954. The North Viet Nam regime, supported by the Chinese Communists, has openly and repeatedly avowed its intention to destroy the independence of the Republic of Viet Nam through massive, ruthless, and incessant guerrilla terrorism against Government and people alike.

Our purpose, under three American Presidents, has been to assist the Vietnamese to live in peace, free to choose both their own way of life and their own foreign policy. We shall continue to honor our commitments in Viet Nam.

PRINCIPLES OF DEFENSE MANAGEMENT

1. To carry out our strategy and enforce our policies requires a large budget for defense.

The world's most affluent society can surely afford to spend whatever must be spent for its freedom and security. We shall continue to maintain the military forces necessary for our security without regard to arbitrary or predetermined budget ceilings. But we shall continue to insist that those forces be procured at the lowest possible cost and operated with the greatest possible economy and efficiency.

To acquire and maintain our unprecedented military power, we have been obliged to invest more than one-half of every dollar paid in taxes to the Federal Government. The Defense budget has grown from $43 billion in Fiscal Year 1960 to more than $51 billion in Fiscal Year 1964. I now estimate the Defense expenditures for Fiscal Year 1965 to be about $49.3 billion, or approximately $2 billion less than in Fiscal Year 1964. I further estimate that Defense expenditures for Fiscal Year 1966 will be reduced still another $300 million.

There are two main reasons for this leveling-off in Defense expenditures:

First, we have achieved many of the needed changes and increases in our military force structure;

Second, we are now realizing the benefits of the rigorous Cost Reduction Program introduced into the Defense establishment during the past four years.

As I have stated -- and as our enemies well know -- this country now possesses a range of credible, usable military power enabling us to deal with every form of military challenge from guerrilla terrorism to thermonuclear war. Barring a significant shift in the international situation, we are not likely to require further increments on so large a scale during the next several years. Expenditures for Defense will thus constitute a declining portion of our expanding annual Gross National Product, which is now growing at the rate of 5 percent each year. If, over the next several years, we continue to spend approximately the same amount of dollars annually for our national defense that we are spending today, an ever-larger share of our expanding national wealth will be free to meet other vital needs, both public and private.

Let me be clear, however, to friend and foe alike. So long as I am President, we shall spend whatever is necessary for the security of our people.

2. Defense expenditures in the years ahead must continue to be guided by the relentless pursuit of efficiency and intelligent economy.

There is no necessary conflict between the need for a strong defense and the principles of economy and sound management. If we are to remain strong --

-- Outmoded weapons must be replaced by new ones,
-- Obsolete equipment and installations must be eliminated,
-- Costly duplication of effort must be eliminated.

We are following this policy now, and so long as I am President, I intend to continue to follow this policy.

We have recently announced the consolidation, reduction, or discontinuance of Defense activities in some 95 locations. When added to those previously completed, these actions will produce annual savings of more than $1 billion each year, every year, in the operations of the Defense Department, and release about 1,400,000 acres of land for civilian purposes. These economies -- which represent more prudent and effective allocation of our resources -- have not diminished the strength and efficiency of our defense forces, but rather have enhanced them.

We are the wealthiest nation in the world and the keystone of the largest alliance of free nations in history. We can, and will, spend whatever is necessary to preserve our freedom. But we cannot afford to spend one cent more than is necessary, for there is too much waiting to be done, too many other pressing needs waiting to be met. I urge the Congress to support our efforts to assure the American people a dollar's worth of Defense for every dollar spent.

3. While our primary goal is to maintain the most powerful military force in the world at the lowest possible cost, we will never be unmindful of those communities and individuals who are temporarily affected by changes in the pattern of Defense spending.

Men and women, who have devoted their lives and their resources to the needs of their country, are entitled to help and consideration in making the transition to other pursuits.

We will continue to help local communities by mobilizing and coordinating all the resources of the Federal Government to overcome temporary difficulties created by the curtailment of any Defense activity. We will phase out unnecessary Defense operations in such a way as to lessen the impact on any community, and we will work with local communities to develop energetic programs of self-help, calling on the resources of state and local governments -- and of private industry -- as well as those of the Federal Government.

There is ample evidence that such measures can succeed. Former military bases are now in use throughout the country in communities which have not only adjusted to necessary change, but have created greater prosperity for themselves as a result. Their accomplishments are a tribute to the ingenuity of thousands of our citizens, and a testimony to the strength and resiliency of our economy and our system of government.

4. We must continue to make whatever changes are necessary in our Defense establishment to increase its efficiency and to insure that it keeps pace with the demands of an ever-changing world; we must continue to improve the decision-making process by those in command.

The experience of several years has shown that certain activities of the Defense establishment can be conducted not only with greater economy, but far more effectively when carried out on a Department-wide basis, either by a military department as executive agent or by a defense agency. The Defense Communications Agency, established in 1959, and the Defense Supply Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency, established in 1961, have all eliminated duplication of effort, improved management, and achieved better fulfillment of their missions. In addition, we have recently announced --

-- Consolidation of the Field Contract Administration offices of the Military Department under the Defense Supply Agency;
-- Formation of the Department of Defense Contract Audit Agency, to increase the efficiency and lower the cost of Government auditing of Defense contracts;
-- Formation of the Traffic Management and Terminal Command, under the single management of the Department of the Army, to regulate surface transportation of military cargo and personnel within the Continental United States.

Each of these actions will lead to better performance, surer control and less cost. Most important, these actions are informing and expediting the decision-making process. We will continue to seek out opportunities to further increase the effectiveness and efficiency of our Defense establishment.

CONCLUSION

The Secretary of Defense will soon come before you with our detailed proposals for the coming year. He will have recommendations for further strengthening of our strategic forces and our conventional forces. He will have additional suggestions for achieving greater efficiency, and therefore greater economy.

As you consider the state of our defenses and form your judgments as to our future course, I know that you will do so in the knowledge that today we Americans are responsible not only for our own security but, in concert with our allies, for the security of the Free World. Upon our strength and our wisdom rests the future not only of our American way of life, but that of the whole society of free men.

This is an awesome responsibility. So far, we have borne it well. As our strength rose -- and largely as a consequence of that strength -- we have been able to take encouraging steps toward peace. We have established an Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. We have signed a limited nuclear test ban agreement with the Soviet Union. We have, at the same time, met the challenge of force, unflinchingly, from Berlin to Cuba. In each case, the threat has receded and international tensions have diminished.

In a world of 120 nations, there are still great dangers to be faced. As old threats are turned back, change and turmoil will present new ones. The vigilance and courage we have shown in the last twenty years must be sustained as far ahead as we can see. The defense of freedom remains our duty -- twenty-four hours a day and every day of the year.

We cannot know the future and what it holds. But all our experience of two centuries reminds us that --

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S FEB. 10 BALANCE OF PAYMENTS MESSAGE

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Feb. 10 message to Congress on the International Balance of Payments:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

After a full review of our international balance of payments and our gold position, I can report to the Congress that:

- The state of the dollar in the world today is strong -- far stronger than three or four years ago.
- To assure its continued and growing strength, however, we need to take new steps to speed our progress toward balance in our external payments.

The strength of our dollar is backed by

-- The world's most productive and efficient economy, moving each year to new heights of output, employment, and income without inflation;
-- the world's largest supply of gold, fully pledged to honor this country's dollar obligations;
-- the world's strongest creditor position, based on $88 billion of public and private claims against foreigners, $37 billion greater than their claims against us; counting our private assets only, the margin is about $15 billion, and steadily growing;
-- the world's most favorable trade position, based on a rise in our exports by more than one-fourth in four years -- a rise which has brought our commercial exports (excluding exports financed by the Government) to $22.2 billion and our commercial trade surplus to $3.6 billion.

Clearly, those who fear for the dollar are needlessly afraid. Those who hope for its weakness, hope in vain:

- A country which exports far more than it imports and whose net asset position abroad is great and growing is not "living beyond its means."
- The dollar is, and will remain, as good as gold, freely convertible at $35 an ounce.

That pledge is backed by our firm determination to bring an end to our balance of payments deficit.

Last year, our flows of dollars abroad -- to pay for our imports and foreign travel, to finance our loans and investments abroad, and to meet our defense and aid obligations -- still exceeded our dollar credits from foreigners by $3 billion. This represents steady improvement over the $3.6 billion deficit in 1962 and the $3.3 billion deficit in 1963. But our progress is too slow.

The world willingly uses our dollars as a safe and convenient medium of international exchange. The world's growing supply of dollars has played a vital role in the postwar growth of the free world's commerce and finance. But we cannot -- and do not assume that the world's willingness to hold dollars is unlimited.

On the basis of searching study of the major causes of our continued imbalance of payments, I therefore propose the following program:

- First, to maintain and strengthen our checkrein on foreign use of United States capital markets, I ask the Congress
  -- to extend the Interest Equalization Tax for two years beyond December 31, 1965;
  -- to broaden its coverage to non-bank credit of one-to-three year maturity;
- Second, to stem and reverse the swelling tide of U.S. bank loans abroad, I have used the authority available to me under the Gore Amendment to the Act to apply the Interest Equalization Tax to bank loans of one year or more.
- Third, to stop any excessive flow of funds to Canada under its special exemption from the Equalization Tax, I have sought and received firm assurance that the policies of the Canadian Government are and will be directed towards limiting such outflows to the maintenance of a stable level of Canada's foreign exchange reserves.
- Fourth, to limit further the outflow of bank loans, I am asking the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in cooperation with the Secretary of the Treasury to enroll the banking community in a major effort to limit their lending abroad.
- Fifth, to ensure the effective cooperation of the banking community, I am requesting legislation to make voluntary cooperation by American bankers in support of our balance of payments efforts, under the Government's auspices, exempt from the antitrust laws wherever such cooperation is essential to the national interest.
- Sixth, to reduce the outflow of business capital, I am directing the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Treasury to enlist the leaders of American business in a national campaign to limit their direct investments abroad, their deposits in foreign banks, and their holding of foreign financial assets until their efforts -- and those of all Americans -- have restored balance in the country's international accounts.
- Seventh, to minimize the foreign exchange costs of our defense and aid programs, I am directing the Secretary of Defense, the Administrator of AID, and other officials immediately to step up their efforts to cut overseas dollar costs to the bone.
- Eighth, to narrow our tourist gap, I encourage our friends from abroad, as well as our own citizens, to "See the U.S.A.;" and I request legislation further to limit the duty-free exemptions of American tourists returning to the United States.
- Ninth, to earn more trade dollars, I am calling for a redoubling of our efforts to promote exports.
- Finally, to draw more investment from abroad, I am requesting new tax legislation to increase the incentives for foreigners to invest in U.S. corporate securities.

These measures will deal with our payments deficit and protect the dollar in ways fully consistent with our obligations
-- to sustain prosperity at home;
-- to maintain our defenses abroad;
-- to supply private and public funds to less developed countries to build both their strength and their freedom;
-- to avoid "beggar thy neighbor" restrictions on trade and work for a successful conclusion of the Kennedy Round trade negotiations;
-- to work with our trading partners toward a more flexible world monetary system.

These actions should achieve a substantial reduction in our international deficit during 1965, and secure still further improvement in 1966.

WHERE WE STAND TODAY

Our deficit in 1964 was too large. And over half of it occurred in the final quarter of the year -- partly because of special and temporary factors.

Yet this disturbing reversal of our progress should not blind us to the solid and significant advances we have made in the past four years.

The broad-based attack we launched four years ago -- and intensified 18 months ago -- has in considerable part hit its mark:

- Tax cuts and other measures to increase output, stimulate cost-cutting investment, and hold prices steady have made U.S. products far more competitive in world markets. Combined with special export promotion efforts, these policies have -- boosted our commercial exports by $4.7 billion or 27%;
  -- pushed our commercial trade surplus to a new record of $3.6 billion -- $800 million more than in 1960, and a gain of $1.3 billion over 1963.
- Unrelenting efforts to cut the dollar drain of defense and foreign aid expenditures have, since 1960,
  -- reduced overseas dollar spending for aid by more than $400 million;
  -- reduced overseas military spending by more than $200 million (despite rising prices in the countries where our forces are stationed);
  -- increased military offset sales to foreign countries through the Department of Defense by $450 million, and expanded sales of military equipment to foreign governments from commercial sources.
- Successful policies for expansion both here and overseas have brought a rise by nearly $2 billion in profits and interest on our past foreign investments.

But these impressive gains totalling well over $3.5 billion did not correspondingly narrow our balance-of-payments deficit. They were largely offset by a $2.5 billion rise in the level of private capital outflow since 1960 -- and $2 billion of this rise occurred from 1963 to 1964:

- The Interest Equalization Tax successfully diminished American purchases of foreign securities from the peak rate of 1963. But new issues exempt from the tax -- especially by Canada -- kept these purchases nearly $500 million above the 1960 level.
- Meanwhile, our banks met foreign demands for capital by adding almost $1 billion to their long-term loans abroad in 1964 -- $800 million above 1960 and $400 million above 1963.
- Short-term capital outflows in the form of bank credits and corporate funds rose to an estimated $2 billion, well above the 1960 and 1963 outflows even though our money-market rates were kept generally in line with those abroad.
- Direct investment abroad by U.S. companies -- very largely in Canada and Europe -- rose by more than $400 million above 1960 levels, and $200 million above 1963.

Moreover, travel and tourist spending abroad rose $600 million from 1960 to 1964, while foreign travel outlays in the United States rose only $200 million.

The net impact of all these changes was to reduce our overall deficit by only $900 million -- from $3.9 billion in 1960 to $3.0 billion last year.

To be sure, we have made more progress than these raw figures suggest. More than half of our 1964 deficit was financed by increased holdings of dollars by foreign citizens and by foreign private banks and businesses. Less than half of it had to be financed by the sale of gold or of dollars to foreign governments and central banks. It is only this "official" part that other countries count as the measure of their deficits.

If we measured our deficit their way, it would show
-- in 1962, a deficit of $3.3 billion;
-- in 1963, a deficit of $2.3 billion; and
-- in 1964 a deficit of only $1.3 billion.

This way of measuring our deficit does not reduce our need for further action. But it gives another, and in many ways a better measure of our progress. It gives another and perhaps more realistic measure of how far we still have to go to attain balance. And it reflects the firm confidence of private individuals the world over in the dollar.

This confidence rests on the full convertibility of our dollars into gold -- at the fixed price of $35 an ounce. Our gold reserve of $15 billion represents 35% of the free world's official gold reserves. To eliminate any possible doubts about its full availability I have asked the Congress to remove the outmoded gold cover requirement against Federal Reserve deposits. I am glad that the Congress is acting promptly on this recommendation.

As we move ahead to further measures to cope with our balance of payments problem, it is clear that we lead from strength. But to safeguard that strength, we must reinforce our programs to bring our external payments into balance and maintain full confidence in the dollar.

MEASURES TO REINFORCE OUR PROGRAMS

Capital

I propose to take further steps to restrain our outflow of capital to the advanced industrial world. I do so reluctantly. The contribution of American capital to the world's growth and prosperity has been immense. But our balance of payments deficit leaves me no choice.

The Interest Equalization Tax has effectively reduced the purchases of foreign securities by Americans since legislation was submitted to Congress in July 1963. At the same time, it has encouraged the broadening and deepening of capital markets in Europe -- markets which can make a lasting contribution to the economic growth of the Free World.

The tax is now scheduled to expire at the end of this year. But circumstances require that it remain in effect.

Therefore, I request the Congress to extend for two years the Interest Equalization Tax on purchases by Americans of foreign securities.

Bank loans abroad with maturities over 1 year -- not now covered by the tax -- increased by more than one-third, or nearly $1 billion, in 1964. The bulk of this money went to other industrialized countries. Of this, only 15% served to finance U.S. exports.

In my judgment this outflow has reflected substitution for new security issues in an amount sufficient materially to impair the effectiveness of the Interest Equalization Tax.

> Acting, therefore, under the authority granted me by the Interest Equalization Tax Act, I have today imposed the Tax on bank loans abroad with maturities of one year or more, with appropriate exemption for borrowers in developing countries.

If the Tax did not apply to foreign credits made by non-bank lenders, it would discriminate against banks and invite an outflow of untaxed funds through non-banking channels.

> Therefore, I request the Congress to amend the Interest Equalization Tax to impose it on extensions of non-bank credit of one year or more maturity, effective as of today.

Finally, and as soon as proper authorizations are prepared, I intend to exempt from the Interest Equalization Tax purchases by United States residents of new securities issued or guaranteed by the Government of Japan, up to an aggregate amount of $100 million each year. Until now, an exemption for Japan under the Interest Equalization Tax has not proved necessary. However, the application of the Tax to bank loans of over one year will, in my judgment, create a sufficient threat to the international monetary system to justify a limited exemption.

These measures are designed to serve our balance-of-payments objectives without imposing direct controls on American business abroad. We seek to preserve the freedom of the market place. But we cannot succeed without the full cooperation of the business and financial community.

I hereby call on American businessmen and bankers to enter a constructive partnership with their government to protect and strengthen the position of the dollar in the world today. In doing so, they will perform a major service to their nation. And they will help assure a setting of economic prosperity at home and economic stability abroad in which to conduct their own business and financial operations.

Let me make clear that the Government does not wish to impede the financing of exports, or the day-to-day operation of American business abroad. But loans and investments which are not essential must be severely curtailed.

Specifically, I ask the bankers and businessmen of America to exercise voluntary restraint in lending money or making investments abroad in the developed countries. This request applies with special force to short-term loans and direct investments, that is, the capital outflows not covered by the Interest Equalization Tax.

In connection with bank loans, I am asking the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to work closely with the Secretary of the Treasury and the nation's banks to develop a program that will sharply limit the flow of bank loans abroad. I have directed the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to cooperate with the Federal Reserve and the Treasury in this undertaking.

To initiate this program, I am inviting a group of our leading bankers to meet with me, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in the near future.

Cooperation among competing banking interests could raise problems under the antitrust laws, and, if extended beyond measures essential to our balance of payments objectives, would damage our competitive system.

> Therefore, I request the Congress to grant a statutory exemption from the antitrust laws to make possible the cooperation of American banks in support of our balance of payments objectives. I request, also, that the legislation require that this exemption be administered in ways which will not violate the principles of free competition.

Pending enactment of this legislation, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve will guide this program of voluntary restraint along lines which raise no antitrust problems.

In connection with short-term corporate lending and direct investment in advanced countries abroad, I am asking a group of our leading businessmen to meet with me and the Secretary of Commerce for a full discussion of the voluntary methods by which we can achieve the necessary results. The Secretary of Commerce will remain in close contact with the responsible corporate officials. He will request periodic reports as the basis for appraising their contribution to our balance-of-payments targets.

I have no doubt that American bankers and businessmen will respond to the nation's need. With their cooperation, we can block the leakage of funds abroad, without blocking the vital flow of credit to American business.

I am confident that the Federal Reserve, in carrying out its responsibilities for monetary policy, will continue its efforts to maintain short-term rates of return in the American money market. The Treasury will fully cooperate. At the same time -- and in view of the heavy flow of private savings into our capital markets -- I expect the continuation of essential stability in interest rates.

Government Expenditures Abroad

Since 1960, we have steadily reduced the dollar drain of our foreign aid program. We have steadily raised the percentage of AID dollars spent for U.S. goods and services -- 85 percent of new AID commitments are now spent within our borders. Until we master our balance-of-payments problem, AID officials will send no aid dollar abroad that can be sent instead in the form of U.S. goods and services.

The same rule will apply to our defense dollars. We have already made major progress in cutting the outflow of dollars for our defenses abroad -- without impairing our strength or our defense commitment to the Free World. I have directed the Secretary of Defense to intensify his program

-- to shift defense buying from sources abroad to sources in the United States;
-- to reduce the staffs in overseas headquarters;
-- to streamline overseas support operations;
-- to work with our defense partners to increase their offset purchases of military equipment in the United States.

The Department of Defense has already conserved hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign exchange by such actions. But the Secretary assures me he can do more, while fully protecting our security interests and discharging our responsibilities.

Foreign Travel

The growing interest of our citizens in foreign lands, and the steady rise in their incomes, have greatly increased American vacation travel abroad. Foreign travel should be encouraged when we can afford it, but not while our payments position remains urgent. Today, our encouragement must be directed to travel in the United States, both by our own citizens and by our friends from abroad.

I ask the tourist industry to strengthen and broaden the appeal of American vacations to foreign and domestic travelers, and I will support its efforts through the "See the U.S.A." program.

In order to cut the dollar outflows associated with foreign travel, I recommend that the Congress

-- pass legislation to reduce the duty exemption on foreign purchases by United States citizens returning from abroad to $50, based on the price actually paid;
-- limit the exemption to goods which accompany the returning travelers.

Foreign Investment in U.S. Securities

A truly worldwide market for capital among industrialized nations requires a two-way flow of investments. In order to stimulate a greater inflow of capital from advanced industrial counties, the Secretary of the Treasury will shortly request legislation, generally along the lines recommended by a Presidential Task Force, to remove tax deterrents to foreign investment in U.S. corporate securities. This action will encourage -- and will be reinforced by -- the efforts of American business and finance to market U.S. stocks and bonds to foreign investors.

Exports and Competition

Finally, and most important for the long pull, American business, labor, agriculture, and government must work together to maintain stable costs and prices and strengthen our trade position in the world.

Essential to a strong competitive position is an expanding economy operating at or near capacity, yet holding costs and prices in check. Sharp reductions in income taxes -- with more liberal depreciation allowances and special incentives for cost-cutting investment -- have played a key role in creating such strength. Rising volume, rising productivity, and falling tax rates have enabled U.S. industry to hold the line on costs and prices while earning record profits and paying record wages.

As a result, U.S. prices and wage costs have remained more stable in recent years than those of any of our major competitors. The 27% rise in commercial exports since 1960 and especially the 15% rise in the past year -- bear witness to our growing ability to compete in foreign markets. And the moderate rise in our import demonstrates our growing ability to meet and beat foreign competition in our home markets.

But we must not take that ability for granted. Unwarranted price and wage increases could destroy it all too quickly. Unless American business and labor hew to the Government's price-wage guideposts, we will run grave risks of losing our competitive advantage.

Wage increases which exceed economy-wide productivity gains and price decisions which ignore falling unit costs -- and there have been recent instances of both -- do us all a disservice.

I call on all Americans to do their share in maintaining our generally excellent record of wage and price moderation. They will thereby strengthen their country both at home and abroad.

On a foundation of stable costs and prices, we will build an increasingly vigorous program of export expansion:

-- I urge the Congress to approve the $13 million budget request for our export expansion program in the next fiscal year.
-- We will step-up our efforts to assure American industry sound and fully competitive export financing.
-- We will strive to eliminate such artificial barriers to U.S. exports as discriminatory freight rates on ocean traffic.

Policies for an expanding economy coupled with responsible price and wage decisions and special measures to convert our competitive advantage into greater exports -- this is the combination that holds the key to a lasting solution of our balance-of-payments problem.

EVOLUTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS SYSTEM

The measures I have proposed in this Message will hasten our progress toward international balance without damage to our security abroad or our prosperity at home. But our international monetary responsibilities will not end with our deficit. Healthy growth of the Free World economy requires orderly but continuing expansion of the world's monetary reserves.

During the past decade, our deficits have helped meet that need. The flow of deficit dollars into foreign Central Banks has made up about half of the increase in Free World reserves. As we eliminate that flow, a shortage of reserves could emerge. We need to continue our work on the development of supplementary sources of reserves to head off that threat. And we need to perfect our mechanisms for making international credit available to countries suffering from balance of payments difficulties -- on terms that will assure orderly correction of imbalances without forcing deflation on deficit countries or inflation on surplus countries.

To go back to a system based on gold alone -- to the system which brought us all to disaster in the early 1930s -- is not an answer the world will, or should, accept. Rather we must build on the system we now have, a system which has served the world well during the past twenty years.

We have already made an excellent start. Our short-term defenses against speculative crises have proved their strength and flexibility. The proposed increase in IMF quotas is a constructive forward step. Further, for some time we have been jointly exploring with our major trading partners how best to create new reserve assets that will be available if needed to supplement gold and dollars.

We must press forward with our studies and beyond, to action -- evolving arrangements which will continue to meet the needs of a fast growing world economy. Unless we make timely progress, international monetary difficulties will exercise a stubborn and increasingly frustrating drag on our policies for prosperity and progress at home and throughout the world.

Let no one doubt it --

We will eliminate our international deficit.
We will maintain the dollar at full value.

Our instruments and our actions must be as strong as our resolve. That is why I have taken the additional steps, and am asking the Congress for the new legislation. These measures will focus our great economic strength more sharply on our payments problem.

This is a problem that involves us all -- as workers, as businessmen, as bankers, and as Government officials.

I know that the Congress and the American public will respond in full measure to the challenge.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S MARCH 8 MESSAGE ON CRIME

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's March 8 message to Congress on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

Crime has become a malignant enemy in America's midst.

Since 1940 the crime rate in this country has doubled. It has increased five times as fast as our population since 1958.

In dollars the cost of crime runs to tens of billions annually. The human costs are simply not measurable.

The problems run deep and will not yield to quick and easy answers. We must identify and eliminate the causes of criminal activity whether they lie in the environment around us or deep in the nature of individual men. This is a major purpose of all we are doing in combatting poverty and improving education, health, welfare, housing, and recreation.

All these are vital, but they are not enough. Crime will not wait while we pull it up by the roots. We must arrest and reverse the trend toward lawlessness.

This active combat against crime calls for a fair and efficient system of law enforcement to deal with those who break our laws. It means giving new priority to the methods and institutions of law enforcement:

- . . . to our police, who are our front line, both offensive and defensive, in the fight against crime. There is a great need not only for improved training of policemen but for all people to learn about, to understand, and to assist the policeman in his work.
- . . . to our courts, traditionally the symbol and guardian of our cherished freedoms. Local criminal courts are so overloaded that their functioning is impeded and their effectiveness weakened. More courts and judges is one answer, but every possibility of improvement must be explored.
- . . . to our correctional agencies. We cannot tolerate an endless, self-defeating cycle of imprisonment, release, and reimprisonment which fails to alter undesirable attitudes and behavior. We must find ways to help the first offender avoid a continuing career of crime.

No right is more elemental to our society than the right to personal security, and no right needs more urgent protection.

Our streets must be safe. Our homes and places of business must be secure. Experience and wisdom dictate that one of the most legitimate functions of government is the preservation of law and order.

Our system rejects the concept of a national police force. The protection responsibilities lie primarily with state and local governments.

That is right and proper.

Yet, crime is no longer merely a local problem. Every city, every state is troubled by the same hard statistical -- and human -- facts. The extent and seriousness of the problem have made it of great national concern.

Crime is as old as history. It is hardly new to America. But in our increasingly mobile, urban society, crime problems are not only greater, they are immensely more complex.

We have not stood idly by in the face of these problems. Many cities and states, as well as the Federal Government, have developed new programs reflecting their growing concern.

Yet the crime rate continues to increase.

The time has come now, to check that growth -- to contain its spread -- and to reduce its toll of lives and property.

I believe the way to do so is to give new recognition to the fact that crime is a national problem -- and to intensify our crime prevention and crime-fighting at all levels of government.

THE ROLE OF THE INDIVIDUAL

The starting point for such efforts is the individual citizen. Law enforcement cannot succeed without the sustained -- and informed -- interest of all citizens.

It is not enough to reflect our concern over the rise in crime by seeking out single answers or simple answers. They do not exist. The people will get observance of the law and enforcement of the law if they want it, insist on it, and participate in it.

It has been said, for example, that the fault lies with courts which "coddle criminals," or, on the other hand, that police officers do not observe the rights of the individual.

There is misunderstanding at times between law enforcement officers and some courts. We need to think less, however, about taking sides in such controversies and more about our common objective: law enforcement which is both fair and effective. We are not prepared in our democratic system to pay for improved law enforcement by unreasonable limitations on the individual protections which ennoble our system. Yet there is the undoubted necessity that society be protected from the criminal and that the rights of society be recognized along with the rights of the individual.

As Mr. Justice Frankfurter once said, "A democratic society, in which respect for the dignity of all men is central, naturally guards against the misuse of the law enforcement process."

It has been said that the fault lies in poor living conditions, limited education, and the denial of opportunity.

Plainly, laws are less likely to command the respect of those forced to live at the margins of our society. Stability and order have little meaning and small advantage to those who exist in poverty, hopelessness, and despair.

The long-run solution to this view of crime is jobs, education and hope. This is a goal to which this country is now committed. But we should remember that not all crime is committed by those who are impoverished or those denied equal opportunity. In any event, we cannot postpone our responsibilities to act against crimes committed today.

It has also been said that the fault lies in a deep moral decay, particularly among the young; that juvenile delinquency and high crime rates among younger adults have their origins in this decay.

In our increasingly complex society, it is becoming harder to perceive and maintain clear moral values. But the great majority of our young people lead law-abiding, creative lives. We need only look to the spirit which characterizes our youth today -- the spirit of the Peace Corps, of VISTA, of commitment to the well-being and welfare of society. While crime by young people in our society is of very serious concern, it involves only a small proportion of our youth.

We must, in short, understand that the reasons for the growth of crime are many and complicated. We must accept hard facts at every turn. But like the related problems of poverty and of education, we must face them squarely if we are to succeed. And we must succeed.

Thus, while recognizing that the basic responsibility rests on local authorities, we must also recognize the burdens they now bear. To assist them in bearing these burdens successfully, I propose:

- . . . increased federal law enforcement efforts;
- . . . assistance to local law enforcement efforts;
- . . . a comprehensive, penetrating analysis of the origins and nature of crime in modern America.

FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT EFFORTS

The average citizen is most directly concerned with what is called "crime in the streets." Crime of this kind -- robberies, muggings, housebreakings -- are the primary law enforcement responsibility of state and local governments. When criminals cross state lines, however, federal enforcement is also available. Thus, federal, state and local investigators may all join to pursue the bank robber, thekidnapper or the auto thief. Federal assistance in these activities has been and can continue to be helpful.

In some areas, however, the Federal Government has a special responsibility -- organized crime, narcotic and drug control, regulation of gun sales, and law enforcement activities in the District of Columbia.

1. Organized Crime

Organized crime is a cancer in the city. It has become an entrenched national industry, it embraces gambling, narcotics, stock and bankruptcy fraud, usurious loans, or corruption of public officials or labor-management relations.

Racketeering feeds on itself. Illegal gambling, for example, channels enormous profits to other criminal arenas. The citizen is the loser.

Organized crime also breeds lesser crime. The police in our large cities know from daily experience how much street crime results, for example, from narcotics addiction.

Perhaps the most alarming aspect of organized crime, however, is that it erodes respect for the law. Corrupting a public official may lend respectability to the racketeer, as it destroys the underpinning of law enforcement in a community.

Since 1961, the Federal Government has responded to this challenge in force. We have secured new legislative authority. We have achieved new levels of cooperation among the 26 different federal law enforcement agencies. We have achieved new prosecutive energy. The result has been a tenfold increase in racketeering convictions.

But this accomplishment represents a mere beginning. Much remains to be done.

Consequently, I am calling on the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the other heads of the federal law enforcement arms to enlarge their energetic effort against organized crime. The Department of Justice will submit legislative proposals to the Congress to strengthen and expand these efforts generally. I urge the prompt enactment of these measures.

2. Drug Control

The return of narcotic and marihuana users to useful, productive lives is of obvious benefit to them and to society at large. But at the same time, it is essential to assure adequate protection of the general public.

To meet these objectives, the President's Advisory Commission on Narcotic and Drug Abuse recommended enactment of a federal civil commitment statute to provide an alternative means of dealing with those narcotic and marihuana users likely to respond to treatment and achieve rehabilitation. The Commission also recommended that those penalty provisions of the federal narcotics and marihuana laws requiring mandatory minimum sentences and precluding probation or parole be applied restrictively in order to provide a greater incentive for rehabilitation.

The Justice Department will shortly submit proposals for a federal civil commitment statute to the Congress and for limiting the coverage of the mandatory minimum penalty sentences. The proposals will seek to the fullest extent consistent with the public safety to give offenders a maximum opportunity for return to a normal life.

Increasing illegal sales of psychotoxic drugs, such as barbiturates and amphetamines, must be controlled. These sedatives and stimulants, taken so easily in pill form, have been termed the "dangerous drugs" -- and with good reason. Senseless killings, robberies, and auto accidents have resulted from the radical personality changes induced by the indiscriminate use of these drugs. Because they are less expensive and more available than narcotics, these drugs appeal to a much broader cross section of our population, particularly the young.

Our existing legal weapons are inadequate. I therefore urge the Congress to enact legislation to control the abuse of these dangerous drugs without constricting their legitimate medical uses.

3. Firearms Control

Drugs are, of course, only one cause of the rise in violent crime in the United States. Another significant factor is the ease with which any person can acquire firearms. Lee Oswald sent for and received a rifle through the United States mail. I believe that the people of the United States have learned, through the recent tragic loss of President Kennedy, the need for strengthened control.

Here the Federal Government's jurisdiction is limited. State and local action will be necessary. But at minimum, we must make effective local regulation of firearms possible by increasing federal control over interstate shipment of firearms. In addition, limits must be imposed on the importation into this country of surplus military weapons and other used firearms.

I am proposing draft legislation to accomplish these aims. It would amend the Federal Firearms Act to prohibit firearms shipments in interstate commerce except among importers, manufacturers and dealers licensed by the Treasury Department.

Mail-order sales to individuals would thus stop. The legislation would also strengthen the present statutory standards for Treasury Department licenses and prohibit licensees from selling firearms to persons under 21 years of age (or under 18 in the case of rifles and shotguns). Other provisions of this legislation are designed to make it feasible for the states to impose effective controls over firearms within their own boundaries. I urge the Governors of our states and mayors and other local public officials to review their existing legislation in this critical field with a view to keeping lethal weapons out of the wrong hands.

I recommend this legislation to the Congress as a sensible use of federal authority to assist local authorities in coping with an undeniable menace to law and order and to the lives of innocent people.

4. District of Columbia

A fourth opportunity for federal leadership is the nation's capital. As I said in my special message on the District of Columbia, we must improve law enforcement and the administration of criminal justice in the District. Washington shares with our large cities the special and acute problems associated with rapid urban population growth.

Both in its own right and as a model for other cities, Washington can and should be a focus for intensive efforts in crime prevention, the detection and prosecution of crimes, rehabilitation, and related activities.

To assist in this effort, I will shortly appoint the commission to which I referred in my message on the District of Columbia.

ASSISTANCE TO LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Whatever we may do to strengthen federal law enforcement, the principal enforcement responsibility still rests on state and local governments -- and that has become a very large burden indeed.

The cost of operating our police departments has risen by 50 percent in the last five years alone. Yet our law enforcement and corrections personnel are overworked. Our courts are overcrowded. Our penal and rehabilitative facilities and programs are understaffed or underdeveloped. To meet their large and growing burdens, state and local law enforcement agencies must have additional training and technical assistance from the Federal Government.

Federal assistance has long been provided in various forms to local law enforcement. Because of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover's early recognition of the need for such assistance, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has provided a number of valuable services to state and local police organizations. It assists them with training activities and the FBI National Academy in Washington gives comprehensive instructions to state and local career law enforcement officers each year. The Federal Government also provides support for short-term vocational training for police officers and more extensive training in related fields through the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Treasury Department provides instruction for narcotics enforcement personnel through the Bureau of Narcotics Training School.

The Federal Government has been giving active support to juvenile delinquency control efforts. Under the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act, programs have been developed to provide new approaches to the prevention and control of juvenile delinquency and to train needed personnel. Under this act important studies have shed new light on the complex causes of delinquency.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare will shortly submit requests for urgently needed additional appropriations in this field. I support these proposals and request the Congress to act on them favorably and rapidly. (Continued on next page)

These are present and continuing endeavors. But we must do more. I believe a major opportunity lies in the development and testing of experimental methods of crime control. To this end, I am proposing the Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1965. This legislation would authorize the Attorney General to assist state, local and private groups to improve and strengthen crime control programs and make generally available information as to their effectiveness.

This Act would bolster present training programs for local law enforcement personnel and would support the development of new training methods. Fighting crime effectively under modern conditions requires professional police who are expertly trained in a variety of skills. The Federal Government now provides financial assistance for research and training in other professions -- science, mathematics, foreign languages, medicine, nursing. Trained, professional law enforcement personnel are fully as essential to the preservation of our national health and strength -- and no less deserving of increased federal support.

This legislation would also authorize federal support for the development of improved methods of enforcing criminal laws and administering justice. For example, experiments might be undertaken with different kinds and intensity of police coverage in high crime districts in order to learn more about the effective allocation of manpower. The effectiveness of different communication and alarm systems might be studied. By pilot projects in the administration of justice, we may find ways of making the judicial process fairer and speedier and the correctional process more effective.

The dissemination of information about projects supported under the Law Enforcement Assistance Act will be of substantial value to other communities in designing their own crime control programs.

PRESIDENTIAL COMMISSION

The proposals which I have discussed are promising immediate approaches to a number of the specific problems of controlling crime. In the longer run we must also deepen our understanding of the causes of crime and how our society should respond to the challenge of our present levels of crime. Only with such understanding can we undertake more fundamental, far-reaching and imaginative programs.

As the first step, I am establishing the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice. The Commission will be composed of men and women of distinction who share my belief that we need to know far more about the prevention and control of crime. I will ask the Commission to make a comprehensive report to me by the summer of 1966 and to make interim reports when early action on the basis of its recommendations may be possible.

No agency of government has ever in our history undertaken to probe so fully and deeply into the problems of crime in our nation. I do not underestimate the difficulty of the assignment. But the very difficulty which these problems present and the staggering cost of inaction make it imperative that this task be undertaken.

It is of the utmost importance that the people of this country understand what is at stake in controlling crime and its effects. I believe therefore that the Commission should disseminate information on its work and findings and build a broad base of public support for constructive action.

Typical of the examples of important and troubling questions on which I believe the Commission can furnish guidance are --

(1) How can law enforcement be organized to meet present needs?

In too many instances present divisions of responsibility for law enforcement reflect unexamined precedent rather than practical organization. In addition to exploring improved law enforcement and correctional techniques, the Commission can be helpful in suggesting possible reorganization of law enforcement functions and methods of achieving greater cooperation where there are separate responsibilities.

(2) What steps can be taken to create greater understanding by those involved in the administration of justice at the state and local level of the efforts of federal courts to ensure protection of individual rights?

The Commission should seek understanding of the needs of those responsible for carrying out our criminal laws and the relationship to these needs of the historic protections our nation has accorded to the accused. The Commission may well serve as a bridge of understanding among all those involved in the fair and effective administration of criminal justice.

(3) Through what kinds of programs can the Federal Government be most effective in assisting state and local enforcement?

The Commission can recommend new and imaginative ways in which the Federal Government can render assistance -- without infringing on the primary responsibility of states and localities.

(4) Is the nation as a whole providing adequate education and training opportunities for those who administer the criminal laws?

The Commission should evaluate the programs and institutions now available for law enforcement officers, correctional personnel and both prosecution and defense attorneys and make recommendations on necessary additions.

(5) What correctional programs are most promising in preventing a first offense from leading to a career in crime?

A large proportion of serious crimes is committed by persons who are previous offenders. Thus, reducing the total volume of crime is, to a large extent, a problem of reducing the rate of recidivism. The first offender's initial contact with our correctional system is often a turning point in his life. The Commission should consider how we can best insure that his first contact will be his last.

(6) What steps can be taken to increase public respect for law and law enforcement officers?

In a free land, order can never be achieved by police action alone, no matter how efficient. There must be a high level of voluntary observance of the law and cooperation with public authorities. Citizens too often shun their duty to report crimes, summon assistance, or cooperate with law enforcement in other ways. In the light of recent examples of what happens when private citizens remain bystanders at tragedy, I hope the Commission will suggest means of improving public attitudes toward the individual's sense of responsibility to his community and to his neighbor.

These questions only illustrate those which this Commission must put to itself. It must also

- . . . consider the problem of making our streets, home and places of business safer;
- . . . inquire into the special problems of juvenile crime;
- . . . examine the administration of justice in our shockingly overcrowded lower courts through which so many citizens are herded wholesale.
- . . . explore the means by which organized crime can be arrested by federal and local authorities.

In its task, the Commission will not be working alone. In addition to its own staff and subpanels of experts in various fields and disciplines, it will have the close cooperation and support of representatives of the Federal Government.

I have directed the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to work closely with the Commission and to assist it in every possible way. Because of the importance of the Attorney General's responsibilities within the Federal Government for these problems -- ranging from investigation and enforcement through administration of the federal prison system -- I anticipate that the Department of Justice and especially its newly created Office of Criminal Justice should take a particularly active role in assisting the work of the Commission.

The Commission also will work closely with representatives of state and local government; with such groups as the American Bar Association, the American Law Institute, state and local bar groups and appropriate law enforcement organizations; and with universities and other institutions and individuals engaged in important work in the social sciences, mental health and related areas.

The task before the Commission is one of consummate difficulty and complexity. But it could scarcely be more important. I hope and expect that its work will be a landmark to follow for many years to come.

CONCLUSION

This message recognizes that crime is a national problem. That recognition does not carry with it any threat to the basic prerogatives of state and local governments. It means, rather, that the Federal Government will henceforth take a more meaningful role in meeting the whole spectrum of problems posed by crime.

It means that the Federal Government will seek to exercise leadership and to assist local authorities in meeting their responsibilities.

It means that we will make a national effort to resolve the problems of law enforcement and the administration of justice -- and to direct the attention of the nation to the problems of crime and the steps that must be taken to meet them.

This effort will involve great difficulties.

It will not produce dramatic, visible results overnight. But it is an effort we must begin now.

I ask the help of the Congress. I believe that these actions and proposals are soundly based and give promise of meeting urgent needs of a growing nation. I commend them to the American people and to the Congress and urge their prompt enactment.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

PRESIDENT REQUESTS $3.4 BILLION FOREIGN AID PROGRAM

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 14 Message to Congress on Foreign Aid:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

I.

We live in a turbulent world. But amid the conflict and confusion, the United States holds firm to its primary goal -- a world of stability, freedom and peace where independent nations can enjoy the benefits of modern knowledge. Here is our difference with the Communists -- and our strength. They would use their skills to forge new chains of tyranny. We would use ours to free men from the bonds of the past.

The Communists are hard at work to dominate the less-developed nations of Africa, Asia and Latin America. Their allies are the ancient enemies of mankind: Tyranny, poverty, ignorance and disease. If freedom is to prevail, we must do more than meet the immediate threat to Free World security, whether in Southeast Asia or elsewhere. We must look beyond -- to the long-range needs of the developing nations.

Foreign assistance programs reach beyond today's crisis, to offer:

Strength to those who would be free;

Hope for those who would otherwise despair;

Progress for those who would help themselves.

Through these programs we help build stable nations in a stable world.

II.

Acting on the experience of the past four years, I am presenting a program which:

-- Is selective and concentrated;
-- Emphasizes self-help and the fastest possible termination of dependence on aid;
-- Provides an increasing role for private enterprise;
-- Improves multilateral coordination of development aid;
-- Reflects continuing improvement in management.

Specifically, for Fiscal Year 1966 I recommend:

-- No additional authorizations for development lending or the Alliance for Progress; existing authorizations for those purposes are adequate;
-- Authorizations of $1,170 million for military assistance;
-- $369 million for supporting assistance;
-- $210 million for technical cooperation;
-- $155 million for contributions to international organizations;
-- $50 million for the President's contingency fund; and
-- $62 million for administrative and miscellaneous expenses.

I am also requesting a special standby authorization for use if necessary in Viet Nam only.

My appropriation request for FY 1966 under these authorizations is for $3,380 million. $1,170 million will be used for military assistance; $2,210 million is for the other categories of aid.

This is a minimum request, the smallest in the history of the foreign aid program. It is $136 million less than requested last year, and will impose the smallest assistance burden on the American people since the beginning of the Marshall Plan in 1948.

This minimum request reflects my determination to present to the Congress the lowest aid budget consistent with the national interest. It takes full account of the increasing efficiency of the assistance program, and the increasing availability of assistance funds from international agencies in which the costs are shared among a number of countries.

I believe that in carrying out this program the American people will get full value for their money. Indeed, we cannot afford to do less. Russia and Red China have tripled their promises of aid in the past year. They are doing more than they have ever done before; the competition between them has led to increased efforts by each to influence the course of events in the developing nations.

If, during the year, situations should arise which require additional amounts of U.S. assistance to advance vital U.S. interests, I shall not hesitate to inform the Congress and request additional funds.

III.

I am requesting $1,170 million for the Military Assistance Program. This is an increase of $115 million over the total appropriation for military assistance for the current fiscal year. In order to meet urgent requirements in Southeast Asia during FY 1965, we cut back programs in other countries which are under pressure. Some of the FY 1966 appropriation will be needed to make up what we have left undone.

Still, the program is highly concentrated. Nearly three quarters of the money will go to eleven countries around the great arch from Greece to Korea. Viet Nam alone will absorb an important share.

Military assistance makes it possible for nations to survive. It provides a shield behind which economic and social development can take place. It is vital to our own security as well. It helps to maintain more than 3-1/2 million men under arms as a deterrent to aggression in countries bordering on the Sino-Soviet world. Without them, more American men would have to be stationed overseas, and we would have to spend far more for defense than we now do.

IV.

As a supplement to Military Assistance, I am requesting $369 million for Supporting Assistance -- economic aid which is directly related to the maintenance of stability and security. Eighty-eight percent of the money will be used in Viet Nam, Laos, Korea and Jordan.

V.

The world's trouble spots -- the Viet Nams and the Congos -- dominate the headlines. This is no wonder, for they represent serious problems. Over $500 million of the current request for military and supporting assistance will be deployed to meet the frontal attack in Viet Nam and Laos.

Indeed, $500 million may not be enough. I am therefore requesting for FY 1966 an additional standby authorization for Military or Supporting Assistance which would be used only in Viet Nam and only in case we should need more funds to protect our interests there. Any program which would make use of this additional authorization will be presented to the authorizing committees of the Congress concurrently with the appropriation request.

Our past investment in the defense of the Free World through the Military Assistance and Supporting Assistance Programs has paid great dividends. Not only has it foiled aggression, but it has brought stability to a number of countries. Since the beginning of this decade, the funds used each year for military aid and supporting assistance have been sharply reduced. Today, we are spending $1 billion less on these accounts than we did in 1960 and 1961.

VI.

Military security in the developing world will not be sufficient to our purposes unless the ordinary people begin to feel some improvement in their lives and see ahead to a time when their children can live in decency. It follows that economic growth in these regions means as much to our security as their military strength. That is an important reason why the United States has taken the lead during the past few years in organizing, on an international basis, a program of development assistance.

Of course, such assistance is and must be concentrated where it will contribute to lasting progress. Experience has demonstrated that certain requirements need to be met by the developing countries if such progress is to occur.

They need to undertake sound measures of self-help -- mobilize their own resources, eliminate waste, and do what they can to meet their own needs. And they need to avoid spending their resources on unnecessary armaments and foreign adventures. Our aid can contribute to their economic and social progress only if it can be provided within a framework of constructive and sensible policies and programs.

Fortunately, most of the developing countries recognize the relationship between the wise use of their own resources and the effectiveness and availability of external aid.

It is a cardinal principle of U.S. policy that development assistance will go to countries which have undertaken effective programs of self-help and are, therefore, able to make good use of aid. During FY 1964, for example, sixty-four percent of our development assistance went to seven such countries: India, Nigeria, Pakistan, Tunisia, Turkey, Brazil and Chile. In other countries as well, including a number of smaller countries, sound self-help efforts are making it possible for us to provide effective development aid.

With development assistance we seek to help countries reach, as rapidly as possible, the point at which further progress is possible without external aid.

A striking example of how, through self-help, a developing country can reach the point where it can carry on without concessional aid is the Republic of China. Little more than ten years ago, Free China faced enormous security and development problems. The prospects for economic growth looked dim. But in only ten years, as a result of determined self-help supplemented by effective U.S. aid:

-- per capita Gross National Product has risen 45 percent;
-- saving accounts for one-fifth of the National Income;
-- exports have tripled;
-- industrial output has tripled;
-- the private share of output has doubled, and now accounts for two-thirds of all industrial production;
-- agricultural production has increased by 50 percent.

Free China has also joined other nations as a good cash customer for U.S. exports, particularly agricultural commodities.

This remarkable cooperative effort has brought the Republic of China to the point where it no longer needs AID assistance. Fiscal Year 1965 marks the end of this successful program.

I am requesting $580 million as our FY 1966 aid commitment to the Alliance for Progress. This is an increase of $70 million over last year's appropriation.

Impatient expectations of this great joint undertaking have sometimes in the past blinded us to its achievements -- achievements which now touch the lives of nearly half of the 200 million people of Latin America. Increasingly, however, the people of the United States have come to recognize what the Alliance means.

To date, as a result of U.S. assistance in support of the Alliance.

-- over 75,000 teachers have been trained;
-- nearly 10,000,000 school books have been put in circulation;
-- over 12,000,000 children are now participating in school lunch programs -- an increase of over 8,000,000 in the past 2-1/2 years;
-- development banks and other credit institutions which support the private sector have been established in fifteen countries;
-- over 300,000 houses have been or are being built;
-- savings and loan associations, nonexistent a few years ago, have now accumulated and are investing local deposits of $75 million;
-- 25 of our own states have joined the Partners for the Alliance Program -- they bring to bear a vital people-to-people effort on our relationships with Latin America;
-- 40 U.S. colleges and universities are working to modernize teaching and training in Latin America.

The Inter-American Committee for the Alliance for Progress (CIAP), established to provide even closer ties for mutual economic effort, successfully completed its first review of country performance under the Alliance. The work of this Committee is further evidence that the governments and people of Latin America are accepting increasing responsibility for their own development. The failure of Castroism is becoming clearer each day. More and more, Latin America is facing up to the fundamental problems of poverty, a rapidly growing population, and financial disorder. Increasingly, more and more of these countries are moving towards economic viability and self-sustaining growth.

The Alliance is taking hold. The war on poverty in Latin America is under way. We in the United States are proud of the way our Good Neighbors to the South are meeting the challenge of development. We are proud, too, of the role the United States is playing in this great effort and pledge our steadily enlarged support.

The problem of food requires special mention.

Growing population and rising standards of living increase the demand for food. Production in most developing countries is barely keeping pace. In some countries, it is actually falling behind.

In the years ahead, if the developing countries are to continue to grow, they must rapidly enlarge their capacity to provide food for their people. Up to a point, they can and should improve their ability to buy some of their food from abroad. For the most part, however, they must expand and diversify their own production of food. This will require many things: changes in traditional methods, abundant use of fertilizer, greater incentives for producers, and, frequently, changes in pricing practices and more effective organization of distribution.

To meet their needs for food, the developing countries will need help.

We, in the United States, are uniquely equipped to give it.

We are rightly proud of our dynamic and progressive agriculture, with its record of success which contrasts so sharply with the agricultural failures of the Communist countries. We must use our agricultural abundance and our extensive technical skills to assist the less-developed countries to strengthen their ability both to produce and to buy agricultural commodities and, more generally, to support rural development.

We can and must mount a more comprehensive program of technical assistance in agriculture engaging the United States Department of Agriculture, our state universities and land grant colleges, and the most creative of our people in agriculture, marketing, and industry.

At the same time, we can help meet the food needs of the developing nations through our Food for Peace Program under Public Law 480. Even under the most favorable conditions, it will be a number of years before the developing countries can produce and import on commercial terms all the food they need. In the interim, our own agricultural plenty can help provide for the hungry and speed the day when these countries can stand on their own feet and pay for their food imports on commercial terms -- as happened in the case of Japan and Europe.

VII.

We are placing increasing emphasis on the role of private institutions and private enterprise in the development process, and we shall continue to do so.

Foreign aid cannot succeed if we view it as a job for government alone. For government can only do a small part of the job. We must bring to bear on the problems of the developing world, the knowledge and skills and good judgment of people from all walks of American life. The Agency for International Development provides the means for utilizing the resources of private business, of our universities and colleges, of farm groups, labor unions, banks, cooperatives, savings and loan associations, and professional groups.

I am happy to report that most AID-financed capital projects and a large and growing part of technical assistance are already administered by contract with private American firms and institutions.

In this connection, the privately managed International Executive Service Corps has an important role to play. I welcome the interest of business executives in serving overseas.

The Advisory Committee on Private Enterprise in Foreign Aid established by the 88th Congress has been meeting for a number of months. It is working hard. We are looking forward to their report which we hope will suggest new ways of enlarging the role of the private sector in the aid program.

To mobilize additional private capital, and the skills which go with it, I am asking the Congress to enact an investment tax credit. I am also asking for expanded authority in connection with the investment guaranty program of the Foreign Assistance Act. However, such measures to encourage the flow of capital to the developing world can do only a part of the job. The less-developed countries must pursue policies that will create new opportunities for their own businessmen and a favorable climate for investors from abroad.

We are making a special effort to encourage private enterprise in the developing countries, through -- technical assistance for private enterprise;

-- productivity centers and schools of business administration for training in management and new techniques;
-- commodity loans to provide materials and parts for private business;
-- loans to industrial development banks and agricultural credit banks;
-- loans to private business.

All of these programs have one object -- to get private enterprise more heavily engaged in the task of development.

VIII.

We will persist in our efforts to put more aid on a multilateral basis, to improve the coordination of bilateral aid, and to increase the share of the burden borne by other Free World Nations.

A growing proportion of economic assistance is directly administered by international financial institutions such as the World Bank, I.D.A., and the Inter-American Bank. In the past four years, such multi-national institutions increased their capital assistance to the developing nations by 50%. We, in turn, are prepared to increase our contribution to those organizations -- as rapidly as other members do so. It is essential that these institutions maintain their international character.

To strengthen multi-national aid, and further to strengthen the Alliance for Progress, I urge the Congress promptly to approve the three-year authorization of $750 million which constitutes the United States contribution to the Fund for Special Operations of the Inter-American Development Bank.

Besides channeling aid through multilateral institutions, we are increasingly relying on international consortia and consultative groups to coordinate our bilateral aid with that of others. India, Pakistan, Turkey, Nigeria and Tunisia are among the countries where such arrangements have been established, in most cases under the auspices of the World Bank. The Inter-American Committee for the Alliance for Progress (CIAP) is fast becoming a most useful forum for the coordination of assistance to Latin American countries.

In addition to these arrangements in support of individual countries and regions, the United States consults regularly with other major donor countries and international agencies in the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

All in all, in FY 1966, 85% of U.S. development loans in Asia and Africa will be committed under international arrangements. All U.S. aid to Latin America is made available within the international framework of the Alliance for Progress.

We are continuing to urge other donors to give more aid on better terms.

Since 1960, new commitments of bilateral economic assistance by other Free World nations have increased by 50%. In the past year, the United Kingdom has organized a Ministry of Overseas Development. Canada has undertaken a program of lending on terms which are more liberal than ours.

We are particularly concerned about the terms of aid. The burden of debt borne by the developing countries is rising. Their accumulated public foreign debt now runs to about $30 billion. The volume of repayments comes to nearly $5 billion per year and it is rising by 15% each year. This is a heavy load for nations with small resources struggling to raise the capital they need for economic and social betterment.

We will continue to emphasize in our discussions with other donors during the coming year the need to improve the terms on which aid is extended.

IX.

Tight, effective management is essential for a tight, effective aid program.

I am especially pleased to report to the Congress about the progress being made by the Administrator of the Agency for International Development in improving the management and operations of the program. The result is greater efficiency for less money.

In keeping with our government-wide economy program, the Agency:

-- Cut direct hire employment during FY 1964 by 1,200; the downward trend has continued during the past six months;
-- Cut superstructure and overhead: during the past 18 months, separate AID organizations in 13 countries and 27 positions at the Mission Director and Deputy level have been eliminated;
-- Streamlined management procedures.

Since the Congress adopted the unified approach to the organization of assistance which is reflected in the 1961 Foreign Assistance Act, our aid programs have been better coordinated, better planned, and have better served the requirements of United States foreign policy.

We are giving continuing attention to the problem of improving the Agency's personnel structure and achieving the highest possible quality in our staff. We expect to do so in the context of a program which is designed to strengthen the personnel capabilities of all the foreign affairs agencies of the Government.

AID has made great progress in reducing the effect of economic assistance on our balance of payments.

The bulk of our assistance -- well over 80% -- now takes the form of U.S. goods and services, not dollars. Dollar payments abroad have sharply declined. In 1960, the dollar drain to other countries which resulted from the aid program measured over $1 billion. This year and next the drain is expected to be less than $500 million. Moreover, a significant part of this is offset by interest on and repayment of past United States loan assistance.

X.

In my Message on the State of the Union, I spoke of the need to create a harmony between man and society -- a harmony which will allow each of us to enlarge the meaning of his life and all of us to elevate the quality of our civilization. This summons is not -- and cannot be -- addressed to Americans alone. For our own security and well-being, and as responsible free men, we must seek to share our capacity for growth, and the promise of a better life, with our fellow men around the world.

That is what foreign aid is all about.

We have pledged our strength -- economic and military -- in defense of those who would be free and in support of those who would join in working toward a stable, prosperous world.

I call upon the Congress to join with me in renewing this pledge and to provide the tools to do the job.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

President Requests New Housing Department, Federal Rent Subsidy Program for the Poor

Text of President Johnson's March 2 Message on Housing and Urban Development:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Throughout man's history, the city has been at the center of civilization. It is at the center of our own society.

Over 70 percent of our population -- 135 million Americans -- live in urban areas. A half century from now 320 million of our 400 million Americans will live in such areas. And our largest cities will receive the greatest impact of growth.

Numbers alone do not make this an urban nation. Finance and culture, commerce and government make their home in the city and draw their vitality from it. Within the borders of our urban centers can be found the most impressive achievements of man's skill and the highest expressions of man's spirit, as well as the worst examples of degradation and cruelty and misery to be found in modern America.

The city is not an assembly of shops and buildings. It is not a collection of goods and services. It is a community for the enrichment of the life of man. It is a place for the satisfaction of man's most urgent needs and his highest aspirations. It is an instrument for the advance of civilization. Our task is to put the highest concerns of our people at the center of urban growth and activity. It is to create and preserve the sense of community with others which gives us significance and security, a sense of belonging and of sharing in the common life.

Aristotle said: "Men come together in cities in order to live. They remain together in order to live the good life."

The modern city can be the most ruthless enemy of the good life, or it can be its servant. The choice is up to this generation of Americans. For this is truly the time of decision for the American city.*

In our time, two giant and dangerous forces are converging on our cities: the forces of growth and of decay.

Between today and the year 2000, more than 80 percent of our population increase will occur in urban areas. During the next 15 years, 30 million people will be added to our cities -- equivalent to the combined population of New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit and Baltimore. Each year, in the coming generation, we will add the equivalent of 15 cities of 200,000 each.

Already the old cities are tending to combine into huge clusters. The strip of land from southern New Hampshire to northern Virginia contains 21 percent of America's population in 1.8 percent of its areas. Along the West Coast, the Great Lakes, and the Gulf of Mexico, other urban giants are merging and growing.

Our new city dwellers will need homes and schools and public services. By 1975 we will need over two million new homes a year. We will need schools for 10 million additional children, welfare and health facilities for 5 million more people over the age of sixty, transportation facilities for the daily movement of 200 million people and more than 80 million automobiles.

In the remainder of this century -- in less than 40 years -- urban population will double, city land will double and we will have to build in our cities as much as all that we have built since the first colonist arrived on these shores. It is as if we had 40 years to rebuild the entire urban United States.

Yet these new overwhelming pressures are being visited upon cities already in distress. We have over nine million homes, most of them in cities, which are run down or deteriorating; over four million do not have running water or even plumbing. Many of our central cities are in need of major surgery to overcome decay. New suburban sprawl reaches out into the countryside, as the process of urbanization consumes a million acres a year. The old, the poor, the discriminated against are increasingly concentrated in central city ghettos; while others move to the suburbs leaving the central city to battle against immense odds.

Physical decay, from obsolescent schools to polluted water and air, helps breed social decay. It casts a pall of ugliness and despair on the spirits of the people. And this is reflected in rising crime rates, school dropouts, delinquency and social disorganization.

Our cities are making a valiant effort to combat the mounting dangers to the good life. Between 1954 and 1963 per capita municipal tax revenues increased by 43%, and local government indebtedness increased by 119%. City officials with inadequate resources, limited authority, too few trained people, and often with too little public support, have, in many cases, waged a heroic battle to improve the life of the people they serve.

But we must do far more as a nation if we are to deal effectively with one of the most critical domestic problems of the United States.

Let us be clear about the core of this problem. The problem is people and the quality of the lives they lead. We want to build not just housing units, but neighborhoods; not just to construct schools, but to educate children; not just to raise income but to create beauty and end the poisoning of our environment. We must extend the range of choices available to all our people so that all, and not just the fortunate, can have access to decent homes and schools, to recreation and to culture. We must work to overcome the forces which divide our people and erode the vitality which comes from the partnership of those with diverse incomes and interests and backgrounds.

The problems of the city are problems of housing and education. They involve increasing employment and ending poverty. They call for beauty and nature, recreation and an end to racial discrimination. They are, in large measure, the problems of American society itself. They call for a generosity of vision, a breadth of approach, a magnitude of effort which we have not yet brought to bear on the American city.

Whatever the scale of its programs, the Federal Government will only be able to do a small part of what is required. The vast bulk of resources and energy, of talent and toil, will have to come from state and local governments, private interests and individual citizens. But the Federal Government does have a responsibility. It must help to meet the most urgent national needs; in housing, in education, in health and many other areas. It must also be sure that its efforts serve as a catalyst and as a lever to help and guide state and local governments toward meeting their problems.

We must also recognize that this message, and the program it proposes, does not fully meet the problems of the city. In part, this is because many other programs, such as those for education and health, are dealt with separately. But it is also because we do not have all the answers. In the last few years there has been an enormous growth of interest and knowledge and intellectual ferment. We need more thought and wisdom and knowledge as we painfully struggle to identify the ills, the dangers and the cures for the American city. We need to re-shape, at every level of government, our approach to problems which are often different than we thought and larger than we had imagined.

*In this message the word city is used to mean the entire urban area -- the central city and its suburbs.

I want to begin that process today.

We begin with the awareness that the city, possessed of its own inexorable vitality, has ignored the classic jurisdictions of municipalities and counties and states. That organic unit we call the city spreads across the countryside, enveloping towns, building vast new suburbs, destroying trees and streams. Access to suburbs has changed the character of the central city. The jobs and income of suburbanites may depend upon the opportunities for work and learning offered by the central city. Polluted air and water do not respect the jurisdictions of mayors and city councils, or even of Governors. Wealthy suburbs often form an enclave whereby the well-to-do and the talented can escape from the problems of their neighbors, thus impoverishing the ability of the city to deal with its problems.

The interest and needs of many of the communities which make up the modern city often seem to be in conflict. But they all have an overriding interest in improving the quality of life of their people. And they have an overriding interest in enriching the quality of American civilization. These interests will only be served by looking at the metropolitan area as a whole, and planning and working for its development.

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

To give greater force and effectiveness to our effort in the cities I ask the Congress to establish a Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Our urban problems are of a scope and magnitude that demand representation at the highest level of government. The Housing and Home Finance Agency was created two decades ago. It has taken on many new programs. Others are proposed in this message. Much of our hopes for American progress will depend on the effectiveness with which these programs are carried forward. These problems are already in the front rank of national concern and interest. They deserve to be in the front rank of government as well.

The new Department will consist of all the present programs of HHFA. In addition it will be primarily responsible for federal participation in metropolitan area thinking and planning. This new department will provide a focal point for thought and innovation and imagination about the problems of our cities. It will cooperate with other federal agencies, including those responsible for programs providing essential education, health, employment and social services. And it will work to strengthen the constructive relationships between nation, state and city -- the creative federalism -- which is essential to progress. This partnership will demand the leadership of mayors, Governors and state legislatures.

INCENTIVES TO METROPOLITAN AREA COOPERATION

The Federal Government cannot, and should not, require the communities which make up a metropolitan area to cooperate against their will in the solution of their problems. But we can offer incentives to metropolitan area planning and cooperation. We can help those who want to make the effort but lack the trained personnel and other necessary resources. And the new Department should have regional representatives in our metropolitan areas to assist, where assistance is requested, in the development of metropolitan area plans. We already have federal programs in which assistance depends upon the completion of soundly conceived metropolitan area plans, such as the mass transportation program passed by the 88th Congress. This program strikes at the heart of one of our most critical and urgent needs -- a transportation system which can relieve congestion and make it possible for people to travel with comparative ease to places of work, learning and pleasure.

I am proposing other programs which will also require sound, long-range development programs as a condition of federal assistance. Wherever it can be done without leaving vital needs unmet, existing programs will also be keyed to planning requirements.

Among the most vital needs of our metropolitan areas is the requirement for basic community facilities -- for water and sewerage. Many existing systems are obsolete or need major rehabilitation. And population growth will require a vastly increased effort in years ahead.

These basic facilities, by their very nature, require cooperation among adjacent communities. I propose a program of matching grants to local governments for building new basic community facilities with an appropriation of $100 million for fiscal 1966. These grants will be contingent upon comprehensive, areawide planning for future growth; and will be made only for projects consistent with such planning.

One of the greatest handicaps to sound programs for future needs is the difficulty of obtaining desirable land for public buildings and other facilities. As growth is foreseen it should be possible to acquire land in advance of its actual use. Thus, when the need arises, the land will be there. I recommend a federal program for financial assistance to help in this advance acquisition of land. Federal grants would be made available to cover the interest charges for five years on loans obtained by public bodies. Thus we will cover the costs during the period before the facilities are constructed.

Last year alone one million acres were urbanized. As our cities spread, far too often we create the ugliness and waste which we call urban sprawl. At times we find we have built new slum areas in our suburbs. Some of our programs are designed to stem this tide by helping city governments to plan their growth. But we must continue to depend upon the private developer and lender for most of our construction. And they sometimes lack the economic resources to ensure high standards of development. I therefore recommend a program of federally insured private loans, backed by federal mortgage (FNMA) purchases where necessary, to finance the acquisition and development of land for entire new communities and planned subdivisions.

This program should enable us to help build better suburbs. And it will also make it easier to finance the construction of brand new communities on the rim of the city. Often such communities can help break the pattern of central city ghettos by providing low and moderate income housing in suburban areas.

This program will be complemented with a program of federal financial assistance to state land development agencies. Under this program public bodies would acquire land, install basic facilities, and then re-sell the improved land to private builders for the construction of suburbs or new communities.

All of these programs would be dependent upon the existence of areawide planning for growth to which the aided developments must conform. They are designed to stimulate the farsighted planning for future growth which is necessary if we are to prevent sprawl and new slums, and to create standards which will guarantee a decent environment for our future city dwellers whatever their race or income. In addition, these programs should enable us to build better suburbs, since it will be possible to acquire land and improve it before the imminent approach of the city has sent costs skyrocketing upward.

RESOURCES FOR PLANNING

To plan for the growth and development of an entire metropolitan area takes a wide range of skills and a large number of trained people. These vital human resources are in short supply. They are beyond the command of many of our cities. To help meet this need I propose to establish an Institute of Urban Development as part of the new department.

This Institute will help support training of local officials in a wide range of administrative and program skills. It will administer grants to states and cities for studies and the other basic work which are the foundation of long-term programs. And it will support research aimed especially at reducing the costs of building and home construction through the development of new technology.

TEMPORARY NATIONAL COMMISSION

Good planning for our metropolitan areas will take not only determination, the spirit of cooperation and added resources. It will also take knowledge, more knowledge than we have now. We need to study the structure of building codes across the country: their impact on housing costs, how building codes can be simplified and made more uniform, and how housing codes might be more effectively enforced to help eliminate slums.

Zoning regulations also affect both the cost and pattern of development. We must better learn how zoning can be made consistent with sound urban development.

Few factors have greater impact on cost, on land speculation and on the ability of private enterprise to respond to the public interest, than local and federal tax policies. These too must be examined to determine how they can best serve the public interest.

Finally, we must begin to develop better and more realistic standards for suburban development. Even where local authorities wish to prevent sprawl and blight, to preserve natural beauty and ensure decent, durable housing they find it difficult to know what standards should be expected of private builders. We must examine what kind of standards are both economically feasible and will provide liveable suburbs.

To examine all these problems I recommend the establishment of a Temporary National Commission on Codes, Zoning, Taxation and Development Standards. I predict that the body masked by such an unwieldy name may emerge with ideas and instruments for a revolutionary improvement in the quality of the American city.

This entire range of programs is designed to help us begin to think and act across historic boundaries to enrich the life of the people of our metropolitan areas. We do not believe such planning is a cure-all or a panacea. It can sometimes be a slender reed. It must be flexible and open to change. And we cannot wait for completed plans before trying to meet urgent needs in many areas. But it will teach us to think on a scale as large as the problem itself, and act to prepare for the future as well as to repair the past.

I hope that, as time goes by, more and more of our federal programs can be brought into harmony with metropolitan areas programs. For in this approach lies one of our brightest hopes for the effective use of local as well as federal resources in improving the American City.

THE PHYSICAL ENVIRONMENT

We owe the quality of American housing to the initiative and vitality of our private housing industry. It has provided the homes which have made most of our citizens the best housed people in the world. Our federal housing programs are designed to work in support of private effort, and to meet the critical needs which can only be met through government action.

After World War II we worked to revitalize the housing market and provide homes for a growing number of our people. This effort has been successful far beyond our initial hopes. However, the problem now has a different shape. It is not enough simply to build more and more units of housing. We must build neighborhoods and communities. This means combining construction with social services and community facilities. It means to build so that people can live in attractive surroundings sharing a strong sense of community.

To meet new objectives we must work to re-direct, modernize and streamline our housing programs. I will ask the Congress to begin the process this year, while continuing these programs which are providing necessary assistance.

We hope to achieve a large increase of homes for low and moderate income families -- those in greatest need of assistance -- through an array of old and new instruments designed to work together toward a single goal.

-- To insist on stricter enforcement of housing codes by communities receiving federal aid, thus mounting an intensified attack on slums.

But such insistence is not realistic, and often not desirable, unless we can provide realistic alternatives to slum housing. We will do this by:

-- providing rent supplements for families across a wide range of lower and moderate income brackets so they can afford decent housing.
-- providing rent supplement assistance to those forced out their homes by code enforcement and all forms of federally assisted government action, from highways to urban renewal.
-- using both urban renewal funds and public housing funds to rehabilitate existing housing and make it available to low and moderate income families. There is no reason to tear down and rebuild if existing housing can be improved and made desirable.
-- emphasizing residential construction and rehabilitation on a neighborhood-wide scale in the urban renewal program.

These instruments, combined with existing public housing and direct loan programs, will greatly strengthen our existing effort. They should offer direct assistance to the housing of one million families over the next four years. Moreover they will immensely add to our flexibility in the process of building neighborhoods.

RENT SUPPLEMENTS

The most crucial new instrument in our effort to improve the American city is the rent supplement.

Up to now government programs for low and moderate income families have concentrated on either direct financing of construction; or on making below-the-market-rate loans to private builders. We now propose to add to these programs through direct payment of a portion of the rent of needy individuals and families.

The homes themselves will be built by private builders, with Federal Housing Administration insurance, and, where necessary, mortgage purchases by the Federal National Mortgage Association. The major federal assistance will be the rent supplement payment for each eligible family.

This approach has immense potential advantages over low-interest loan programs:

First, its flexibility will allow us to help people across a much broader range of income than has hitherto been possible. And it will therefore make it possible significantly to increase the supply of housing available to those of moderate income.

Second, the payment can be keyed to the income of the family. Those with lower incomes will receive a greater supplement. Under present direct loan programs the amount of the subsidy is the same for all who live in a federally assisted development regardless of individual need.

Third, the amount of assistance can be reduced as family income rises. It can be ended completely when income reaches an adequate level. Thus we will not end up, as is sometimes the case, helping those who no longer need help.

Fourth, it will be unnecessary to evict from their homes those whose income has risen above the point of need. This will eliminate what is often a great personal hardship.

Fifth, since the supplement is flexible it will permit us to encourage housing in which families of different incomes, and in different age groups, can live together. It will make it unnecessary for the Government to assist and even require the segregation by income level which detracts from the variety and quality of urban life.

In the long run this may prove the most effective instrument of our new housing policy. In order to give it a fair chance we are limiting it to carefully designed categories of need.

-- in a program of rental and cooperative housing for those low and moderate income families displaced by government action or now living in substandard housing. The subsidy will help them pay rent or meet payments on a federally insured mortgage.
-- in a program of home ownership for those displaced or living in substandard housing who display a capacity for increasing income and eventually owning their own home.
-- in a program to provide a broader range of housing for the elderly with inadequate incomes. The existing direct loan program for the elderly will continue at its existing level with the funds already provided by the Congress. I intend to ensure a steadily increasing supply of federally assisted housing for older Americans.

On this basis our rent supplement program should finance more than 500,000 homes over the next four years, while improving our ability to make these homes serve the social needs of those who live in them. If it works as well as we expect, it should be possible to phase out most of our existing programs of low-interest loans.

REHABILITATION

We have concentrated almost all our past effort on building new units, when it is often possible to improve, rebuild and rehabilitate existing homes with less cost and less human dislocation. Even some areas now classed as slums can be made decent places to live with intensive rehabilitation. In this way it may often be possible to meet our housing objectives without tearing people away from their familiar neighborhoods and friends. Sometimes the same objective can be achieved by helping local authorities to lease standard homes for low-rent families.

I recommend a change in the public housing formula so that we can more readily use public housing funds to acquire and rehabilitate existing dwellings -- and to permit local authorities to lease standard housing for low-rent families. This will assist particularly in providing housing for large families.

I recommend the use of urban renewal funds to permit low-income homeowners to repair their homes and non-profit sponsors to rehabilitate and operate homes for low-income families at rents they can afford.

I have recommended the appropriation of funds for low-interest rehabilitation loans under urban renewal, designed to help rescue our existing housing from blight and decay.

EXISTING PROGRAMS

I ask Congress to continue, on a modified basis, the existing housing programs which have proven their ability to meet important needs. But I also wish to state my intention to reduce or eliminate these programs whenever new and more flexible instruments have shown they can do a better job.

The public housing program should be continued with an authorization ample enough to permit an increase in the number of new units as well as to conduct a program of rehabilitation.

I ask the continuation, at the rate of 40,000 additional units for fiscal 1966, of the program of below market interest rate mortgage purchases for housing for moderate income families. At the same time we must recognize that the benefits of this program are decreasing as the rising costs of federal borrowing narrows the difference between the interest we ask and that demanded in the private market.

I urge continued support for our college housing program which is struggling to keep up with the needs of a rising volume of students.

I ask that our urban renewal program be increased to a level of 750 million dollars a year by 1968. This program has done much to help our cities. But we have also learned, through hard experience, that there is more to eliminating slums and building neighborhoods than knocking down old buildings and putting up new ones.

Through using funds for rebuilding existing housing and by providing more and better assistance to families forced out by urban renewal, we can make this program better serve the people it is meant to help. We will continue to use urban renewal to help revitalize the business and industrial districts which are the economic base of the central city. But this program should be more and more concentrated on the development of residential areas so that all our tools -- from the poverty program, to education and construction -- can be used together to create meaningful and liveable communities within the city.

To accomplish this purpose cities must develop long-range programs which take into account human as well as construction needs. Therefore I recommend that every city of 50,000 or larger develop a Community Renewal Program as a condition of federal help for urban renewal. These programs will provide an orderly schedule and pattern for development of areas of blight and decay -- combining social and educational services with the planning of physical construction.

NEIGHBORHOOD FACILITIES

A community must offer added dimensions to the possibilities of daily life. It must meet the individual's most pressing needs and provide places for recreation and for meeting with neighbors. I therefore recommend a new program of matching grants to help local governments build multipurpose neighborhood centers for health and recreation and community activity. Related to our housing programs these centers can help urban renewal and public housing meet the goal of creating a meaningful community.

At the same time these centers must not be isolated expressions of interest. They should be part of an over-all program for improving the life of people in disadvantaged areas. Therefore, I am recommending that in cities participating in the War Against Poverty these grants be made only when they are consistent with an approved community action program.

BEAUTIFYING THE CITY

In my message on natural beauty I pointed out that much of the effort of the new conservation would be directed toward the city. I recommend changes in the open space program, broadening its authority to help local governments acquire and clear areas to create small parks and squares, malls and playgrounds. In addition I recommend special grants to cities for landscaping, the planting of trees, the improvement of city parks and other measures to bring beauty and nature to the city dweller.

But beauty is not simply a matter of trees and parks. The attractiveness of our cities depends upon the design and architecture of buildings and blocks and entire urban neighborhoods. I intend to take further steps to ensure that federal construction does not contribute to drab and ugly architecture. But in this field, as in so many others, most of our hopes rest on the concern and work of local governments and private citizens.

CONCLUSION

This message can only deal with a fragment of the effort increasingly directed toward improving the quality of life in the American city. The creation of jobs, the war against poverty, support for education and health, programs for natural beauty and anti-pollution are all part of an effort to build the great cities which are at the foundation of our hopes for a Great Society.

Nor can we forget that most of our programs are designed to help all the people, in every part of the country. We do not intend to forget or neglect those who live on the farms, in villages, and in small towns. Coordinated with the Depe-tment of Agriculture, the programs I have outlined above can do much to meet rural America's need for housing and the development of better communities.

Many of these programs are intended to help the poor and those stripped of opportunity. But our goal is more ambitious than that. It is nothing less than to improve the quality of life for every American. In this quest the future of the American city will play the most vital role. There are a few whose affluence enables them to move through the city guarded and masked from the realities of the life around them. But they are few indeed. For the rest of us the quality and condition of our lives is inexorably fixed by the nature of the community in which we live. Slums and ugliness, crime and congestion, growth and decay inevitably touch the life of all. Those who would like to enjoy the lovely parks of some of our great cities soon realize that neither wealth nor position fully protects them against the failures of society. Even among strangers, we are neighbors.

We are still only groping toward solution. The next decade should be a time of experimentation. Our cities will not settle into a drab uniformity directed from a single center. Each will choose its own course of development -- whether it is to unite communities or build entirely new metropolitan areas. We will seek new ways to structure our suburbs and our transportation; new techniques for introducing beauty and improving homes. This is an effort which must command the most talented and trained of our people, and call upon administrators and officials to act with generosity of vision and spaciousness of imagination.

I believe today's proposals are an important start along that road. They should help us to look upon the city as it really is: a vast and myriad complex of homes and communities, people and their needs, hopes and frustrations. It can liberate the expectations of men, or it can crush them in body and spirit.

For underneath all the rest, at the very bottom of all we do, is the effort to protect, under the conditions of the modern world, values as old as this nation and the civilization from which it comes. We work in our cities to satisfy our needs for shelter and work and the ability to command a satisfying way of life. We wish to create a city where men and women can feed the hunger of the spirit for beauty and have access to the best of man's work; where education and the richness of diversity expands our horizons and extends our expectations. But we also look for something more.

The American city should be a collection of communities where every member has a right to belong. It should be a place where every man feels safe on his streets and in the house of his friends. It should be a place where each individual's dignity and self-respect is strengthened by the respect and affection of his neighbors. It should be a place where each of us can find the satisfaction and warmth which comes only from being a member of the community of man. This is what man sought at the dawn of civilization. It is what we seek today.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

President Proposes Excise Tax Cuts Totaling $3.5 Billion in Two Years

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's May 17 message to Congress on proposed cuts in excise taxes:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Fourteen months ago, I signed the Revenue Act of 1964, which reduced the income taxes of the American people by $14 billion.

That action had a profound impact on the American economy:

- Consumer buying rose $28 billion.
- Business investment in plant and equipment rose $6½ billion.
- Almost 2 million new jobs were created, and unemployment fell to the lowest level in 7 years.

Meanwhile, the stability of our prices -- unmatched in the world today -- held firm, and our foreign trade surplus set new records.

I am proud of the success of the 1964 tax cut. It proves that taxes do much more than raise revenue to finance Government -- they also affect the health and strength of the nation's economy.

EFFECT OF TAX POLICY

Unwise tax policy can:

-- unduly restrict private purchasing power;
-- hold back economic growth;
-- stifle incentives;
-- distort decisions by consumers and producers;
-- enlarge rather than shrink budget deficits.

On the other hand, wise tax policy can:

-- raise the purchasing power of private citizens;
-- expand production and create jobs;
-- stimulate initiative and improve efficiency;
-- reduce budget deficits by expanding the tax base and increasing tax revenues.

We used tax policy last year to achieve those goals.

As a result, this month we passed a milestone in economic history: more than 50 months of unbroken peacetime expansion.

But we cannot stand still. We must continually adjust our tax system to assure that it makes a maximum contribution to our economic growth.

For that reason I am recommending reductions in excise taxes as well as increases in user charges.

EXCISE TAXES

I recommend an excise tax reduction of $3.5 billion in two equal stages effective July 1, 1965 and January 1, 1966.

I also recommend further reductions on January 1 of each year from 1967 through 1969 totaling $464 million.

Many of our existing excises were born of depression and war. Many were designed to restrain civilian demand in wartime and thereby free resources for military use. They need to be reexamined to assure that they do not hold back an expanding peacetime economy.

The proposed program of excise tax cuts and revisions will spur growth and move us closer to full employment by removing an unnecessary drag on consumer and business purchasing power. It will also:

-- lower prices to consumers;
-- lessen the burden of regressive taxes on low-income families;
-- raise business profits by expanding sales and cutting costs of tax compliance;
-- cut the Government's costs of tax collection and enforcement;
-- end an unfair burden on many businesses and workers who produce the commodities singled out for excise taxation;
-- free consumers from the distorting effects of these taxes on their market choices.

THE PROGRAM OF EXCISE TAX REDUCTION

In the Budget for fiscal year 1966, I proposed an excise tax reduction of $1.75 billion effective July 1, 1965, and an increase in user charges of $300 million.

Our improving fiscal position, together with our developing economic situation, now makes it possible and desirable to double the recommended excise tax cut.

Responding strongly to an expanding economy, revenues for both fiscal years 1965 and 1966 are now estimated substantially higher than our conservative January estimates:

- For fiscal 1965, we now expect revenues to be $1.4 billion above the January figure of $91.2 billion.
- For fiscal 1966, we now anticipate -- given the tax program as proposed in January -- that revenues would be about $1.6 billion above the January estimate of $94.4 billion.

We can make the recommended tax cuts and still realize total revenues well above -- and a deficit well below -- our earlier estimates for fiscal 1966.

Because the progress of the U.S. economy in 1965 is living up to our expectations, the January proposal for a $1.75 billion reduction this July continues to be appropriate.

But as we look ahead to 1966, we must be alert to the possibility that our taxes will take too much buying power out of the private economy. To foster continued strong expansion of the economy in 1966, I am recommending an additional $1.75 billion reduction of excise taxes, effective January 1, 1966.

The revenue impact on the fiscal 1966 budget of the additional reduction -- which will affect only the last half of the fiscal year -- will be about $600 million. This will leave a substantial portion of the anticipated increase in revenues above the January Budget estimate to reduce the estimated budget deficit.

The reductions I am recommending will accomplish, prudently and responsibly, a major reform of the excise tax structure. We will:

-- eliminate most of our present excise taxes on July 1, 1965, and even more on January 1, 1966;
-- eliminate the tax on telephone service, in several steps, by January 1, 1969;
-- gradually reduce the automobile excise tax from 10 percent now to 5 percent by January 1, 1967;
-- leave only, in addition, the excises on alcoholic beverages, tobacco, gasoline, tires, trucks, air transportation (and a few other user-charge and special excises) which should remain a part of our tax system.

EXCISE TAX REDUCTION, DEFENSE, AND THE NATION'S ECONOMY

In proposing these reductions, I am fully aware of our present and prospective commitments for the defense of the free world. It is impossible to predict precisely what expenditures these may involve in the future. There is, however, no present indication that expenditures will increase to an extent that would make these excise tax reductions inadvisable.

Indeed, our international responsibilities require that we redouble our efforts to assure the continued healthy growth of our economy. Barring some sudden change in the present world situation, I am sure that these excise tax reductions will be a sound and profitable investment in that growth.

A careful evaluation of our labor supply and industrial capacity -- and of the prospective rapid growth of both -- indicates that:

- The carefully timed stimulus of the excise tax cuts will help us achieve fuller use of the American economy's great and growing potential without creating pressures that might threaten our fine record of price stability.

● Removal of excise taxes will, in fact, cut the prices of many items to consumers and thereby tend to ease pressures on our cost of living.

To ensure that the excise tax reductions make the maximum contribution to continued price stability and balanced prosperity, I call on American business to translate lower excise taxes promptly into lower retail prices for consumers.

Business will share fully in the benefits of excise tax cuts through the larger sales volume they will generate. Rising volume will boost profits and create more jobs.

These advances will extend beyond the industries whose taxes are removed or reduced. Consumers and businesses will use some of their gains to enlarge their purchases of other products and services. Demand will be strengthened throughout the economy. And for products bought by businesses, the tax reductions will lower costs.

In these ways excise tax cuts, like income tax cuts, will stimulate total demand in the economy and serve to increase production and incomes by far greater amounts than the cost of the tax reduction itself.

And again, federal revenues will grow -- not shrink -- as the final result of tax reduction.

Effective July 1, 1965, I recommend the following:

Retail Taxes -- the complete repeal of the existing retail excise taxes on handbags and luggage, toilet articles, jewelry and furs.

Manufacturers Taxes -- the complete repeal of the manufacturers excise taxes on business machines, sporting goods (other than fishing equipment), radios, television sets, phonographs, phonograph records, musical instruments, cameras, film and other photographic equipment, refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners, electric, gas and oil appliances, fountain pens, ball point pens, mechanical pencils, lighters, matches and playing cards.

Automobile Tax -- a reduction of the manufacturers excise tax on passenger automobiles from 10 percent to 7 percent.

Miscellaneous Taxes -- the complete repeal of the excise taxes on safe deposit boxes, coin-operated amusement devices, bowling alleys, and pool tables.

Refunds -- To avoid deferral of purchases, the July 1 tax reductions on automobiles and air conditioners to be made retroactive to apply to all consumer purchases after May 14, 1965. Refunds would be made to the manufacturer on presentation of evidence that the final customer had been reimbursed.

I further recommend the following later excise tax reductions:

Local and Long Distance Telephone Service Tax -- effective January 1, 1966, a reduction from 10 percent to 3 percent of the tax on local and long distance telephone service, including teletypewriter service. A further reduction of one percentage point effective each January 1 through January 1, 1969, when the tax will be completely repealed.

Admissions Taxes -- effective January 1, 1966, the complete repeal of the excise taxes on admissions, including the tax on general admissions which applies to certain movies, theater performances, concerts, athletic events and racing, the tax on cabarets, and the tax on club dues.

Other Manufacturers Taxes -- effective January 1, 1966, the complete repeal of the manufacturers taxes on lubricating oil and electric light bulbs, and repeal of the tax on automobile parts and accessories except as it applies to those parts and accessories which are primarily for use only on trucks.

Automobile Tax -- effective January 1, 1966, a further reduction to 6 percent in the tax on new passenger automobiles and effective January 1, 1967, a final reduction to 5 percent. I recommend that the excise tax on new automobiles be retained as a continuing revenue source at the 5-percent rate. It is not regressive. It is an important source of federal revenues. Its compliance and collection costs are exceptionally low.

Documentary Stamp Taxes -- effective January 1, 1966, the complete repeal of the documentary stamp taxes on the issuance and transfer of stocks and bonds and on deeds of conveyance.

Other Communications Taxes -- effective January 1, 1966, revision of the tax on local and long distance telephone service so that it will no longer apply to amounts paid for private communications systems even where the private system is linked with the general telephone network. This service is almost exclusively a business cost item and competes with non-taxable business communication services. Charges for service on the general telephone network originating or terminating in the private system would be taxable until the telephone tax is completely repealed. I also recommend complete repeal of the tax on telegraph and wire and equipment service.

In the foregoing program, customer refunds are recommended for purchases after May 14 only in the case of

-- air conditioners, which are unique in their seasonal purchase pattern

-- automobiles, which are unique in the large dollar amount of tax per unit.

I am informed that other business groups affected by the proposed tax cuts have concluded that the advantages of possible refunds are outweighed by the cost and complexity of the paper work they would involve.

Floor-stock refunds are appropriate for most manufacturers taxes and are so provided in the recommended program.

One further important change concerns the annual automatic reductions in the so-called Korean rates. To avoid the costly and time-consuming process of nullifying these reductions each year, I recommend removal of the automatic reduction dates for the present excise taxes on distilled spirits, wines, beer, and cigarettes.

The Committee on Ways and Means has already held extensive public hearings on excise tax reduction. Further, the recommended program calls for repeal of the great majority of excises, thereby minimizing the controversy and hard choices that might otherwise have delayed action. Therefore, it is my hope and expectation that the Congress will enact these changes without undue delay.

USER CHARGES

The reductions in excise taxes which I am recommending will contribute to greater economic efficiency and equity in our society.

Pursuit of these very same goals of efficiency and equity demands that we increase certain other excise taxes or impose new ones.

This special class of excise taxes is better described as "user charges." They are taxes paid by those who benefit from special services provided by the Government. These user charges serve several purposes:

-- They assess the costs of special services and facilities against those who reap the benefits, instead of imposing unwarranted burdens on the general taxpayer.

-- They restrain the demands of special groups for expanded services by establishing the principle that the beneficiaries pay at least part of the costs.

-- In the case of transportation, they help to eliminate the economic distortions which result when competing modes of transportation rely in varying degrees on facilities or services provided by the Government.

Every President since Harry Truman has reaffirmed the principle of user charges and has proposed extension of their use.

President Eisenhower said: "Many services performed and privileges granted by the Government in the public interest also convey a special, added benefit to individuals or groups who can afford to pay for them. In some cases, the fees are substantially below the costs of providing the services. Thus, the general taxpayer is required to subsidize operations which should be self-supporting. The scope and cost of these hidden subsidies have grown considerably during the past decades. I firmly believe in the principle that Government services which give a special benefit to users should be financed by adequate charges paid by the users."

Substantial constructive action has been taken by the Congress to reaffirm and extend the principle of user charges, particularly in the field of transportation. But user charges have not been applied with an even hand. I would consider it a serious abdication of responsibility if I were to propose a substantial reduction in excise taxes without at the same time moving to correct serious inequities that exist in the field of user charges.

Users of highways come closer to reimbursing the Federal Government for its transportation investment than any other group. But inequities remain among the various classes of highway users.

The airlines and their passengers make substantial -- but still insufficient -- contributions toward the development and operation of the federal airways. The airlines operate about 2000 planes. The private, business, and pleasure aircraft which make up the general aviation sector number some 86,000. Yet general aviation, which receives a large share of the benefits of the federal airways system, contributes very little toward the cost of the airways.

Users of the inland waterways pay nothing toward the cost either of the initial improvements or of the operation and maintenance of the waterways.

The absence of a fair system of user charges strongly affects the ability of various segments of the transportation industry to compete and obscures the inherent advantages of some modes of transportation. As a result, it unnecessarily increases the cost of transportation to the economy.

I therefore recommend new and additional transportation user charges. These proposals are designed to:

-- move toward the elimination of inequities among the several modes of transportation

-- recover a larger part of the outlays by the Federal Government for services and facilities which mainly benefit special groups.

HIGHWAYS

New cost estimates already submitted to the Congress show that the Interstate System will cost $5.6 billion more to complete than previously estimated. The added funds are needed because of increased construction costs, additional design features, and the requirement that highway capacity be based on estimated traffic twenty years in the future rather than on the traffic anticipated by calendar year 1975. Of this cost increase, $5 billion represents the federal share.

I recommend that Congress approve this revised cost estimate, as required by law, and authorize the additional necessary appropriations so that the Interstate System can be completed.

Existing user taxes will provide almost $2 billion of the increased costs. This leaves approximately $3 billion to be raised by extending these taxes beyond the present expiration date, or by increasing some of these taxes -- or both.

In the interest of advancing this program at an orderly pace, part of this requirement should be met by a short extension of the completion date for the Interstate System and of the existing user charges. I recommend, therefore, that the date for reduction of the taxes earmarked for the Highway Trust Fund be extended from September 30, 1972, to February 28, 1973.

Extending the completion date and the existing user tax program will meet most of the increased costs of the Interstate System. But unless we enact some increase in current revenues to the Highway Trust Fund, a number of states will be required to cut back sharply on their construction programs.

For this reason, I recommend immediate additional user taxes on heavy trucks estimated to yield about $200 million annually until 1973.

Specifically, I recommend -- that the excise tax on highway diesel fuel be raised from 4 cents to 7 cents per gallon;

-- that the present truck use tax be increased from $3 to $5 per thousand pounds on trucks having a taxable gross weight of more than 26,000 pounds; and

-- that the tax on tread rubber, largely affecting heavy trucks, be increased from 5 cents to 10 cents per pound.

In its extensive study of highway costs and cost responsibilities -- submitted to the Congress in preliminary form in 1961 and in final form this year -- the Bureau of Public Roads has carefully allocated cost responsibilities among the various classes of highway users. The Bureau's studies clearly show that heavy trucks are not paying fully for the additional cost of heavier pavement and other design features needed to carry them.

The increases I am proposing will provide the added revenues required to complete the Interstate System. They will also achieve a fairer sharing of costs among the users of the highways.

I have carefully considered proposals for an increase in the limits on sizes and weights of trucks that may legally operate on the Interstate System. As I have noted, substantial under-taxation of heavy trucks now exists. This inequity would be further aggravated if increases in size and weight limits were to be made without imposing the additional user charges. I should not and must not approve legislation to relax these limits for vehicles on the Interstate System unless the Congress imposes these additional user charges. I will promptly recommend that the size and weight limits on trucks using the Interstate System be raised as soon as just and appropriate user charges are enacted.

AVIATION

In 1961 the Congress took a major step forward in the area of aviation user charges. At that time it dropped the general excise tax of 10 percent on the transportation of persons. But it retained a 5 percent tax on the transportation of persons by air to serve as a user charge. I recommend -- that this tax now be made permanent;

-- that commercial aviation bear a larger share of its appropriate cost responsibilities through the enactment of a new user tax of 2 cents per gallon on jet fuels and by continuing the existing user tax of 2 cents per gallon on aviation gasoline;

-- that a user tax of 2 percent be levied on air freight waybills so that shippers by air as well as air travelers will bear some part of the cost of maintaining the federal airways.

At the present time general aviation contributes less than 4 percent of its fair share of the cost of developing and maintaining the federal airways. To replace the present 2 cent tax on aviation gasoline used by general aviation, I recommend a modest user charge of 4 cents per gallon on all fuels used by general aviation. Under this proposal, general aviation would pay 9 percent of its share of total costs.

All of these taxes should be made permanent, and aviation gasoline taxes now transferred to the Highway Trust Fund should be retained in the General Fund.

Over the years the Federal Aviation Agency has provided the Congress with careful studies of the appropriate allocation of airways costs among military, commercial, and general aviation users. These studies show that even with these new user charges, the various classes of civil users will still be paying less than their full share of airway costs.

INLAND WATERWAYS

No user charge of any kind is presently in effect on the use of the inland waterways. This is unfair to the taxpayers and to competing modes of transportation. We are currently spending more than $50 million a year for operating and maintaining the inland waterways, and over $200 million a year for new investment. In view of these large and increasing public expenditures, equity requires that users of the inland waterways begin to contribute to the cost of providing their transport network. Accordingly, I recommend a tax of 2 cents per gallon on all fuel used on the inland waterways. The proposed tax will recover a very small fraction of the operating and maintenance costs of the waterways.

DRAFT LEGISLATION AND REVENUE IMPACT

I am transmitting herewith draft legislation to carry out my recommendations.

The attached tables provide the detailed revenue figures associated with my recommendations.

CONCLUSION

I know that the Congress and the country will join me in recognizing our good fortune in being able to declare a new fiscal dividend of nearly $4 billion in excise tax cuts out of the bounty of a prosperous and growing economy -- a dividend that will help keep it prosperous and growing.

This is not our first tax cut. It will not be our last. But in consolidating our prosperity and advancing the cause of fairness and balance in our tax system, it will surely rank as one of the most important.

Johnson Requests Presidential Succession, Electoral College Constitutional Amendments

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 28 message to Congress on proposed constitutional amendments governing Presidential inability, Vice Presidential vacancies and Electoral College voting:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

In 1787, Benjamin Franklin remarked near the conclusion of the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia, "It...astonishes me, Sir, to find this system approaching so near to perfection as it does...."

One-hundred-seventy-eight years later the relevance of that Constitution of 1789 to our society of 1965 is remarkable. Yet it is truly astonishing that, over this span, we have neither perfected the provisions for orderly continuity in the Executive direction of our system nor, as yet, paid the price our continuing inaction so clearly invites and so recklessly risks.

I refer, of course, to three conspicuous and long-recognized defects in the Constitution relating to the Office of the Presidency:

1. The lack of a constitutional provision assuring the orderly discharge of the powers and duties of the President -- Commander-in-Chief -- in the event of the disability or incapacity of the incumbent.

2. The lack of a constitutional provision assuring continuity in the Office of the Vice President, an Office which itself is provided within our system for the primary purpose of assuring continuity.

3. The lack of a constitutional provision assuring that the votes of electors in the Electoral College shall without question reflect the expressed will of the people in the actual election of their President and Vice President.

Over the years, as I have noted, we have escaped the mischief these obvious omissions invite and permit. Our escape has been more the result of Providence than of any prudence on our part. For it is not necessary to conjure the nightmare of nuclear holocaust or other national catastrophe to identify these omissions as chasms of chaos into which normal human frailties might plunge us at any time.

On at least two occasions in our history, and perhaps others, American presidents -- James Garfield and Woodrow Wilson -- have for prolonged periods been rendered incapable of discharging their Presidential duties. On sixteen occasions in our thirty-six Administrations, the Office of Vice President has been vacant -- and over the two perilous decades since the end of the Second World War, that vital office has been vacant the equivalent of one year out of four. Finally, over recent years, complex but concerted campaigns have been openly undertaken -- fortunately without success, as yet -- to subvert the Electoral College so that it would register not the will of the people of individual states but, rather, the wishes of the electors themselves.

The potential of paralysis implicit in these conditions constitutes an indefensible folly for our responsible society in these times. Common sense impels, duty requires us to act -- and to act now, without further delay.

Action is in the tradition of our forebears. Since adoption of "The Bill of Rights" -- the first ten Amendments to our Constitution -- nine of the fourteen subsequent Amendments have related directly either to the Offices of the Presidency and Vice Presidency or to assuring the responsiveness of our voting processes to the will of the people. As long ago as 1804 and as recently as 1964, Americans have amended their Constitution in striving for its greater perfection in these most sensitive and critical areas.

I believe it is the strong and overriding will of the people today that we should act now to eliminate these unhappy possibilities inherent in our system as it now exists. Likewise, I believe it is the consensus of an overwhelming majority of the Congress -- without thought of partisanship -- that effective action be taken promptly. I am, accordingly, addressing this communication to both Houses to ask that this prevailing will be translated into action which would permit the people, through the process of constitutional amendment, to overcome these omissions so clearly evident in our system.

I. Presidential Inability

Our Constitution clearly prescribes the order of procedure for assuring continuity in the Office of the Presidency in the event of the death of the incumbent. These provisions have met their tragic tests successfully. Our system, unlike many others, has never experienced the catastrophe of disputed succession or the chaos of uncertain command.

Our stability is, nonetheless, more superficial than sure. While we are prepared for the possibility of a President's death, we are all but defenseless against the probability of a President's incapacity by injury, illness, senility or other affliction. A nation bearing the responsibilities we are privileged to bear for our own security -- and the security of the Free World -- cannot justify the appalling gamble of entrusting its security to the immobilized hands or uncomprehending mind of a Commander-in-Chief unable to command.

On September 29, 1964, the Senate passed Senate Joint Resolution 139, proposing a constitutional amendment to deal with this perplexing question of Presidential disability -- as well as the question, which I shall discuss below, of filling vacancies in the Office of Vice President. The same measure has been introduced in this Congress as S J Res 1 and H J Res 1. The provisions of these measures have been carefully considered and are the product of many of our finest constitutional and legal minds. Believing, as I do, that S J Res 1 and H J Res 1 would responsibly meet the pressing need I have outlined, I urge the Congress to approve them forthwith for submission to ratification by the states.

II. Vacancy in the Office of the Vice President

Indelible personal experience has impressed upon me the indisputable logic and imperative necessity of assuring that the Second Office of our system shall, like the First Office, be at all times occupied by an incumbent who is able and who is ready to assume the powers and duties of the Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief.

In our history, to this point, the Office of the Presidency has never devolved below the first clearly prescribed step of constitutional succession. In moments of need, there has always been a Vice President, yet Vice Presidents are no less mortal than Presidents. Seven men have died in the Office and one has resigned -- in addition to the eight who left the Office vacant to succeed to the Presidency.

We recognized long ago the necessity of assuring automatic succession in the absence of a Vice President. Various statutes have been enacted at various times prescribing orders of succession from among either the presiding officers of the Houses of Congress or the heads of Executive Departments who, together, comprise the traditional Cabinet of the President. In these times, such orders of succession are no substitute for an office of succession.

Since the last order of succession was prescribed by the Congress in 1947, the Office of the Vice Presidency has undergone the most significant transformation and enlargement of duties in its history.

Presidents Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy have successively expanded the role of the Vice President, even as I expect to do in this Administration.

Once only an appendage, the Office of Vice President is an integral part of the chain of command and its occupancy on a full-time basis is imperative.

For this reason, I most strongly endorse the objective of both S J Res 1 and H J Res 1 in providing that whenever there is a vacancy in the Office of Vice President, provision shall exist for that Office to be filled with a person qualified to succeed to the Presidency.

III. Reform of the Electoral College System

We believe that the people should elect their President and Vice President. One of the earliest amendments to our Constitution was submitted and ratified in response to the unhappy experience of an Electoral College stalemate which jeopardized this principle. Today there lurks in the Electoral College system the ever-present possibility that electors may substitute their own will for the will of the people. I believe that possibility should be foreclosed.

Our present system of computing and awarding electoral votes by states is an essential counterpart of our federal system and the provisions of our Constitution which recognize and maintain our nation as a union of states. It supports the two party system which has served our nation well. I believe this system should be retained. But it is imperative that the electoral votes of a state be cast for those persons who receive the greatest number of votes for President and Vice President -- and for no one else.

At the same time, I believe we should eliminate the omission in our present system which leaves the continuity of the offices of President and Vice President unprotected if the persons receiving a majority of the electoral votes for either or both of these offices should die after the election in November and before the Inauguration of the President. Electors are now legally free to choose the President without regard to the outcome of the election. I believe that if the President-Elect dies under these circumstances, our laws should provide that the Vice President-Elect should become President when the new term begins. Conversely, if death should come to the Vice President-Elect during this interim, I believe the President-Elect should, upon taking office, be required to follow the procedures otherwise prescribed for filling the unexpired term of the Vice President. If both should die or become unable to serve in this interim, I believe the Congress should be made responsible for providing the method of selecting officials for both positions. I am transmitting herewith a draft Amendment to the Constitution to resolve these problems.

Favorable action by the Congress on the measures here recommended will, I believe, assure the orderly continuity in the Presidency that is imperative to the success and stability of our system. Action on these measures now will allay future anxiety among our own people -- and among the peoples of the world -- in the event senseless tragedy or unforeseeable disability should strike again at either or both of the principal offices of our constitutional system. If we act now, without undue delay, we shall have moved closer to achieving perfection of the great constitutional document on which the strength and success of our system have rested for nearly two centuries.

Home Rule for the District

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Feb. 2 special message on home rule for the District of Columbia:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The restoration of home rule to the citizens of the District of Columbia must no longer be delayed.

Our federal, state and local governments rest on the principle of democratic representation -- the people elect those who govern them. We cherish the credo declared by our forefathers: No taxation without representation. We know full well that men and women give the most of themselves when they are permitted to attack problems which directly affect them.

Yet the citizens of the District of Columbia, at the very seat of the government created by our Constitution, have no vote in the government of their city. They are taxed without representation. They are asked to assume the responsibilities of citizenship while denied one of its basic rights. No major capital in the free world is in a comparable condition of disenfranchisement.

The denial of home rule to the District creates serious practical difficulties. The District is the ninth largest city in the United States -- more populous than eleven of the states. Its government must handle the same problems which press with increasing urgency on the legislative, executive, and judicial arms of city governments throughout the nation, and it must perform as well many of the functions of state and county governments. Under the present system these duties fall upon busy members of the Senate and the House who -- in addition to their Congressional responsibilities -- must serve as state representatives, county supervisors, and city councilmen for Washington.

Self-government for the District would not be an innovation. It is a return to the views of the Founding Fathers and to the practice of the early days of the nation. James Madison wrote in the Federalist that the inhabitants of the Nation's Capital > "...will have had their voice in the election of the government which is to exercise authority over them; as a municipal legislature for local purposes, derived from their own suffrages, will of course be allowed them;...."

Such a "municipal legislature" was established in 1802 under President Jefferson. It was strengthened in 1812 under President Madison; and in 1820, under President Monroe, it was enlarged to include an elected mayor.

Had it not been for the tragedy of the Civil War, local government would have continued. In 1871 the people of the District, deep in the problems of the Reconstruction Period and urgently needing a program of public works, acquiesced in a change to a territorial form of government under which they lost the right to elect their chief executive. The program of public works was badly executed and the territorial government was soon in virtual bankruptcy. In 1874 Congress withdrew the voting franchise entirely and substituted a commission form of government. The intent was to make the change temporary -- a receivership which would be replaced by self-government as soon as the fiscal affairs of the city were on a sound basis. But this "receivership" has now lingered on for ninety years.

There is a fundamental federal interest in the national capital. The Constitution wisely delegates to the Congress supreme legislative power over "the seat of the Government of the United States." The Congress can, however, delegate to a municipal legislature all the powers necessary for local self-government, and at the same time preserve fully its ultimate power and the interests of the Federal Government.

The District of Columbia Charter Act which I am transmitting to the Congress today will relieve the Congress, to the maximum practical extent, of detailed legislative direction of District affairs while retaining essential control in the Congress. The bill ----

(1) Creates a representative local government for the District,
(2) Provides a link between the Congress and the local govment in the form of an elected delegate to the House of Representatives, and
(3) Preserves intact the powers of the Congress and the President by

(a) an express provision that the Congress is in no way deprived of its power to legislate for the District, and may repeal or modify any act of the local council;
(b) a provision for an absolute veto by the President of any act of the local council; and
(c) provisions for supervision of the fiscal affairs of the District by the General Accounting Office.

Home rule for the District has been unfinished business for far too long a time. Presidents of both parties -- Presidents Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy -- have urged it. Measures to provide it were passed by the Senate in the 81st, 82nd, 84th, and 86th Congresses.

The people of the District are ready and eager to join fully in the democratic process. In the Presidential election of 1964, more than 90 percent of the registered voters went to the polls.

I urge the Congress to approve at the earliest possible date the legislation which will grant them the fundamental American right of self-government.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

MESSAGE ON AREA AND REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Text of President Johnson's March 25th message on Area and Regional Economic Development:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The promise of America is opportunity for our people. It must therefore be a matter of concern to all Americans when any of our fellow citizens is denied the chance to build a full life for himself and his family.

Yet this is the condition of life for millions of our fellow citizens in areas of distress scattered across the continent.

At a time of instant communication and swift transport it is difficult to realize how varied are the regions of this country. Abundance and opportunity, progress and hope are, however, not evenly spread over the land. The same diversity of conditions which contributes to the richness of our society and culture, also bears with harsh inequality on those in stricken stretches of America.

A wide array of programs and weapons had been called into action to make sure no American is denied opportunity because of his race, or lack of education, or the poverty of his birth.

As our people more fully realize their human potential, we must be sure that the economic potential in all areas and regions is also realized. Indeed, in order to be fully effective, education programs, health programs, the programs of the war on poverty, and many other activities require complementary efforts to promote sound economic conditions and the proper physical environment.

Opportunity should not be closed to any person because of the circumstances of the area in which he lives.

Moreover the distress or inderdevelopment of any part of the country holds back the progress of the entire nation. This has been one of the great lessons of the last thirty years. Region after region from the deep South to the far West has been brought into the mainstream of our economic life. The consequence has been increased vitality and strength, not only in those areas whose resources had been previously underemployed, but for the nation as a whole. Nonetheless, much remains to be done.

A growing nation cannot afford to waste those resources, human and natural, which are now too often neglected and unused in distressed areas. We cannot afford the loss of buying power and of national growth which flow from widespread poverty. Above all, we cannot afford to shut out large numbers of our fellow citizens from the fulfillment of hope which is shared by the rest. For that would be the denial of the promise of America itself.

The troubles and the potentials of depressed areas which contain approximately 27 million people vary widely. They are scattered across almost every section of the country. But they share certain common characteristics.

Nearly always their population growth is well below the national average, and often it is declining. Large areas in Illinois, Oklahoma, Arkansas and elsewhere have lost more than twenty percent of their population in the last decade, while America as a whole was increasing its numbers by almost as much.

This pattern of decline is a symptom of economic distress. For in these areas employment and income are far below the national average. Unemployment rates of ten to fifteen percent are not uncommon. In dozens of counties more than fifty percent of all families have annual incomes of less than two thousand dollars.

Worst of all, the distressed area is usually caught in a web of circumstances which block progress and lead to further decline.

Young people are forced to leave school earlier to help support their families, thus depriving themselves of needed skills and knowledge. Many young people must leave families and homes behind them in search of greater opportunity, stripping the area of badly needed skill and energy. Older men and women tend to stay on, clinging to the communities and friends which have been part of their lives and which enrich their existence.

As income goes down, these areas are less and less able to support schools, hospitals and other public facilities needed to train their people and otherwise equip them to meet the demands of modern life. They are often too poor to provide the public structures -- from roads to water -- needed to attract new business and new jobs. The result is a steadily mounting toll in human poverty and retardation of the nation's progress.

To break this downward spiral, to restore vitality and forward motion to America's distressed areas, I recommend a program of Area and Regional Economic Development -- focused upon the economic needs of distressed areas and aimed at providing the conditions which can lead to growth. This program will be based primarily upon the experience of the Accelerated Public Works Program, the Area Redevelopment Administration, and the Appalachian Regional Development Commission.

The economic development of distressed areas, like that of a nation, is an enormously complex process. It requires work and cooperation from both public and private enterprise. It requires partnership between officials at every level of government -- local, county, state and federal. It demands attention to a wide diversity of development needs -- from improved transportation and water supply to industrial incentives and public facilities. It means that the varied resources and abilities of each region must be harnessed in a concerted effort to build a solid economic base for increasing industry, bringing with it more jobs and higher income.

In this effort we build upon the invaluable experience of the experimental Area Redevelopment program carried on for the last four years.

First, ARA has shown that helping businessmen to expand or to build new plants, coupled with financial assistance to provide needed public facilities, can produce new jobs.

As of January 31, 1965, the Area Redevelopment Administration had approved 548 projects of which over 300 were in rural areas. These projects have and will assist in the creation of over 115,000 jobs. According to a recent study, more than three out of every four persons now working on ARA-assisted projects were not working full-time prior to their present jobs. All of these jobs were in new, expanded or restored facilities.

Second, ARA has shown that the cost to the Government of creating these jobs is less than the cost of supporting these workers and their families through public assistance programs.

It has been estimated that, taking into account all outlays, the average non-returnable one-time cost to the Federal Government for each job is about $800. More than this is saved in not having to pay unemployment compensation and welfare benefits to persons employed as a result of ARA activities. The cost is made once -- the benefits continue as long as the jobs last.

Third, ARA has shown that people in our communities will work together in economic self-help programs.

Under the Area Redevelopment program, more than 1,000 local committees have been formed to work on overall economic development programs. Some of the programs are producing dividends without any other Federal aid whatsoever.

Fourth, ARA has shown that counties can be advantageously grouped together to promote cooperation on problems of mutual economic interest.

Under the Area Redevelopment program some 75 multi-county programs have been approved. The counties of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, for example, are tackling common problems with their own regional organization called UPCAP. The counties of Southeastern Ohio are jointly organized through Ohio University to assist in the growth of local industries. Northeastern Pennsylvania is working under the leadership of Wilkes College to plan and carry out an area-wide economic development program.

Drawing on this past experience we can now move ahead with a long-range program of Area and Regional Economic Development to assist in restoring economic health to distressed areas of America.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

Under the new program three basic principles will guide our action.

First, we will devote maximum effort to providing the conditions under which our private enterprise system can provide jobs and increased income. It is up to private business to take advantage of improved conditions for making profits by expanding present businesses or starting new ones, thereby increasing opportunity for the people of the region.

Second, no federal plan or federal project will be imposed on any regional, state or local body. No area will be declared distressed by Federal decree. No economic development district will be designated unless the state and local people want it to be designated. No plan will be approved unless it also has the approval of state and local authorities. No programs or projects will be originated at the federal level. The initiative, the ideas, and the request for assistance must all come to Washington, not from Washington.

Third, the Federal Government will seek full value from every dollar spent or loaned under this program. Every proposal will be tested to see if it offers substantial promise of increasing economic development commensurate with the federal funds involved. Only if a project meets this test will it be approved. Over the years the increased economic activity stimulated by this program will return its costs many times to the federal treasury.

ORGANIZATION FOR DEVELOPMENT

A key feature of this new program is the proposal to group together distressed counties and communities in economically viable development districts. Planning and assistance will concentrate on the needs of the area as a whole, as well as on individual counties and towns. Moreover, for planning many programs it makes sense to work in terms of larger regions encompassing in some cases parts of two or more states.

This is merely the recognition of a simple fact. Neither distress nor the potential for development respects state, county or community boundaries. The economies of many areas are an organic whole. Just as many counties have declined together, they must advance together if they are to advance at all.

For individual counties and communities are often not capable of individual growth. Their industry must draw upon workers from other areas, and this means educated and trained workers must be available. Factories in communities in other counties can offer employment and rising income to their people. Large scale public facilities can be built most economically if they are designed to serve the needs of a large area. Many other Federal programs, such as assistance in the construction of hospitals, can be carried on more effectively if they are consistent with a genuine, region-wide program of development.

Often places which are not themselves in distress can with help and stimulation provide new jobs for the people of a surrounding distressed region.

Grouping counties together will permit assistance to be concentrated on those communities and industries whose rapid development offers the most hope for all the people of a region.

Thus we hope to work with regions which contain all the components of economic advance, unhampered by rigid boundaries.

The new organization for development will have four main components:

First, Redevelopment areas -- the counties and labor commuting areas which are the basic units of the region, and where employment and income figures reveal conditions of distress and provide a measure of progress.

Second, Economic Development districts -- Organizations of distressed areas -- generally multi-county in nature -- which will work together on common problems and can sustain economic growth once the development process is started.

Third, Action planning commissions for regions -- multi-state regions where comprehensive, long-range economic planning can be carried out by joint Federal-State Commissions, to solve economic problems too large or difficult to be dealt with on a local basis.

Fourth, Economic development centers -- the places where resources can be most swiftly and effectively used to create more jobs and higher income for the people of the surrounding area. These centers may or may not themselves be distressed. Successful development is frequently easier to achieve when a number of activities are located in a single community large enough to offer the advantages which flow from size itself. Clusters of industry tend to attract other industry. And such clusters offer the prospect of increased economic activity and improved economic health of the entire area.

To implement this design for development I recommend that the Secretary of Commerce be given authority to: (1) designate redevelopment areas on the basis of data relating to unemployment or income; (2) work with states to organize multi-county economic development districts; (3) include in such districts economic development centers not otherwise eligible for designation as a redevelopment areas; and (4) invite and encourage states to establish multi-state regional action planning commissions to prepare long-range action programs to improve the economic growth of the region.

This program, national in scope, is intended to aid those areas most in need of assistance throughout the country. Accordingly, it is necessary to provide objective criteria to determine those areas qualified for assistance under the program, and thus the bill contains measurable standards for eligibility based on either unemployment or median family income statistics. Qualifying unemployment data would be the same as in the Area Redevelopment Act. In addition, counties could qualify if the median family income is less than 40 percent of the national median.

Indian areas would be designated after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior.

When there has been a sudden plant shutdown or closing of a military installation, the Secretary would be authorized to designate areas for assistance if he determines that the area can be expected to become eligible within three years unless assistance is provided.

The program will contain standards which ensure that aid is concentrated on areas of real need, and that it is being distributed on an objective basis.

INSTRUMENTS OF DEVELOPMENT

Our experience with various forms of assistance under ARA and the Accelerated Public Works program has shown us ways to improve our techniques and our tools for providing economic growth.

DIRECT GRANT PROGRAM

I recommend a direct grant program for development facilities related to economic development and matched at 50 percent of the cost of the project. In addition, because of the long-term economic depression in many of the depressed areas, I am recommending authorization of supplementary grants to help the most needy communities to meet their matching share of federal grant-in-aid programs. Additional federal assistance up to 80 percent of the net project cost would be made available to communities unable to take advantage of regular federal programs because of their inability to raise the required local share. These supplemental payments to needy communities would be limited to programs assisting in the construction or equipment of development facility projects, including those eligible for 50 percent grants under this proposed legislation.

An annual authorization of $250,000,000 for grants for development facilities and supplemental payments is being requested.

LOAN PROGRAMS

The existing ARA program of loans for land, building, machinery and equipment has provided loans at 4 percent interest, of up to 65 percent of the cost of the project for industrial or commercial facilities. As of January 31, 1965, 396 projects have been approved under this program amounting to an investment of $173,000,000 in ARA funds.

Private capital has participated with the Federal Government to a great extent in these projects. All told, approximately $127,000,000 has been invested in these projects from all non-Federal sources, of which some 300 private banking institutions have invested more than $40,000,000.

Nevertheless, we need to do more to encourage greater utilization of private capital in redevelopment projects. To this end, I propose that the Secretary of Commerce be authorized to reimburse approved borrowers two percentage points of the cost of interest to them for up to ten years on money borrowed from private institutions for expansion or establishment of plants in redevelopment areas in accordance with the development programs.

This proposal will stimulate greater use of private capital in recovery and development. Moreover, it avoids tying up large blocks of federal funds over long periods of time. The Federal Government's share of these new contracts during any one year would be limited to $5,000,000. This would facilitate and encourage $250,000,000 of private investment annually in depressed areas.

I am also recommending that authority be granted to guarantee working capital loans up to 90 percent. These guarantees would be available to supplement other financial assistance under this program.

The present ARA program of low-cost 40-year loans for development facilities would be continued largely unchanged under the new program.

These direct loans and loan guarantees would be available to firms where their activities promise to create increased long-term employment.

An annual authorization of $170,000,000 is recommended for a revolving fund, which would include direct loans for commercial and industrial facilities, loans for development facilities, and reserve for working capital guarantees.

The present requirement in the Area Redevelopment Act that State or local public agencies provide 10 percent of the cost of industrial projects, and that local investors must wait until the Federal loan has been entirely repaid before receiving repayment of principal, has worked a hardship on many needy communities. Accordingly, I am recommending that this requirement be reduced to 5 percent of the project cost and that repayment be concurrent with repayment of the federal loan. In exceptionally needy cases, the Secretary of Commerce would be authorized to waive the 5 percent requirement. However, in no case will there be a waiver of the requirement that at least 15 percent of the total project cost be invested as equity or on a lien subordinate to that of the federal investment.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE

It is not enough to simply help finance projects. These projects must be part of a comprehensive plan to build a viable economy. To do this we must provide technical assistance and encourage the formation of development organizations large enough to hire trained people to prepare comprehensive plans and carry them out. For these purposes, I am recommending the following new types of assistance:

-- Grants and technical assistance to Regional Action Planning Commissions to enable them to prepare long-range regional economic development programs within the context of overall industrial, transportation, recreation and other natural resource planning. An annual authorization of $15 million is proposed for this purpose.

-- Grants and technical assistance to multi-county economic development districts for formulating overall economic development plans.

-- Additional federal grants of 10 percent for development facility projects which are part of an approved district development plan, as a special incentive to encourage communities to work together.

-- Federal grants and loans for designated economic development centers in order that economic development districts will have resources sufficient to sustain their growth.

For the last two purposes I am recommending an authorization of $50 million. To allow ample time for the states to prepare well thought-out action programs, no projects would be approved under this authorization until one year after enactment of the legislation.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

This enlarged and redirected program of economic development will be administered by the Department of Commerce, which has also been responsible for the existing experimental program. The legislation I am proposing would create the position of Economic Development Administrator in that Department. The functions and powers of the existing Area Redevelopment Administration would be transferred to a successor organization to be created by the Secretary of Commerce to administer the new Act.

Many other federal programs also can contribute to the economic development of distressed areas. It is essential that these programs be closely coordinated to make sure resources are used with maximum effectiveness in reaching the common goal of a higher standard of living for the people of these regions. Therefore, I have directed the Secretary of Commerce to work closely with interested departments and agencies in achieving a coordinated federal effort. It is especially important that this effort be carried forward in close cooperation with the Office of Economic Opportunity.

The anti-poverty program will help people improve their ability to obtain and hold a job. This program is designed to increase the number of jobs available to those who want to work. Obviously both efforts are essential to the future growth of distressed areas. I intend to see that they work closely together toward the common objective.

CONCLUSION

There are three important things to remember about this program. First, it is designed to extend opportunity to those now deprived of a full chance to share in the blessings of American life. As such it has a call upon the moral conscience of every citizen.

Second, it will benefit all Americans. The experience of the last thirty years has shown conclusively that the increasing prosperity of any region of this country increases the prosperity of the nation. We have truly become a national economy. Higher incomes for the people of Illinois or Arkansas mean increased markets for automobiles from Detroit and steel from Pittsburgh. Poverty in one area slows progress in other areas.

Third, the job can be done. We have the resources and the skill to extend American abundance to every citizen and every region of this land. This program will help give us the instruments to match our determination to eliminate poverty in America.

The conditions of our distressed areas today are among our most important economic problems. They hold back the progress of the nation, and breed a despair and poverty which is inexcusable in the richest land on earth. We will not permit any part of this country to be a prison where hopes are crushed, human beings chained to misery, and the promise of America denied.

These conditions of our depressed areas can and must be righted. In this generation they will be righted.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

TEXT OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S MAY 18 LABOR MESSAGE

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's May 18 message to Congress on proposals dealing with labor:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The last thirty years have seen unprecedented economic development in this country and unparalleled improvement in the general standard of living of the working men and women of America.

Most of this has been accomplished privately. These are the fruits of free enterprise.

This process of economic and human growth has been helped by wise legislative enactment, much of it beginning in the decade of the 1930s.

But progress is never complete. Experience under various existing laws suggests changes which will make them serve even better their purpose, the nation's workers, and the economy.

I am accordingly urging early action to:

1. Amend the Fair Labor Standards Act to -- extend its protection to an additional 4½ million workers, and

-- restrict excessive overtime work through the payment of double time.

2. Strengthen the unemployment insurance program by -- providing a permanent program of federal extended benefits for long-term unemployed with substantial work histories.

3. Ensure uniform application of our national labor relations policy by the repeal of Section 14 (b) of the National Labor Relations Act.

I am transmitting herewith draft bills on the first two proposals. Bills embodying the third have already been introduced in Congress.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

More than a generation of Americans have entered the labor force since we committed ourselves as a nation to the policy of improving the substandard living conditions of millions of our workers.

That policy proposed to eliminate conditions which are "detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers" in industries engaged in interstate commerce.

Many American workers whose employment is clearly within the reach of this law have never enjoyed its benefits. Unfortunately, these workers are generally in the lowest wage groups and most in need of wage and hour protection. We must extend minimum wage and overtime protection to them.

It is also essential to amend the overtime provisions of the Act to help achieve a fairer and more effective distribution of employment.

A significant increase in employment can be obtained by distributing to new employees work which is presently performed through excessive overtime. This can be done without impairment of operating efficiency.

The proposed bill will encourage hiring of additional workers by requiring double-time pay for certain overtime work.

It has been urged that the minimum wage level be increased. The present $1.25 hourly rate results in annual earnings, assuming full-time work throughout the year, of only $2,500. As average wages rise, the minimum wage level should be increased periodically.

The question is not whether the minimum wage should be increased but when and by how much. The Congress should consider carefully the effects of higher minimum wage rates on the incomes of those employed, and also on costs and prices, and on job opportunities -- particularly for the flood of teen-agers now entering our labor force.

It has also been urged that consideration be given to a reduction in the statutory workweek -- the weekly period after which overtime premiums or penalties must be paid.

The developing pattern of collective bargaining reflects changes which are taking place in the practices regarding the length of work periods -- daily, weekly, annually, and in terms of the individual's work life.

I do not think the time for change in the law has come, except with respect to excessive overtime. Careful attention to these developments is nevertheless appropriate and desirable. I am accordingly requesting the National Commission on Technology, Automation, and Economic Progress to include on its agenda full consideration of the matter of "work periods."

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE SYSTEM

Improvements in our unemployment compensation system are essential if the program is to exert a stronger stabilizing effect on the economy and provide people with adequate income when out of work. The system has not kept pace with the times. No major improvements have been made since its original enactment thirty years ago.

There are still many workers who are not protected by unemployment compensation. Other workers, through no fault of their own, experience excessively long periods of uncompensated unemployment.

The plight of the long-term unemployed results primarily from economic factors such as automation, other technological changes, and relocation of industry. Their unemployment is a phenomenon of normal as well as recession periods. It can be dealt with effectively only through a nationally coordinated program.

Even in non-recession periods of recent years, the number of long-term unemployed has remained high. Among unemployment insurance beneficiaries, those unemployed 26 or more weeks represented 15 percent of the total in 1956, 29 percent in 1961, and about 20 percent in 1962 and 1964.

The wider coverage, extended benefit periods, and increased benefit amounts provided in the bill will lessen the hardship and suffering that accompany unemployment and, at the same time, provide stimulus to the economy when it is most needed.

Now, when unemployment is lower than it has been for years, is the appropriate time to modernize the system so that it will better meet the needs of workers, the community and the nation.

Today, weekly benefits are often too low in amount and too short in duration in relation to lost wages to enable the workers to meet basic and nondeferrable expenses. Ceilings on compensation all too often fail to yield the original goal of 50 percent of past wages. This is particularly true for workers who have the highest income levels, and these workers are generally heads of family. The bill therefore assures adequate payments for a fixed duration for most regular workers.

The burden of excessively high unemployment costs that exist in several states must be relieved and the financial soundness of the system strengthened. This will be achieved by increasing the amount of wages subject to taxation -- the first increase in the history of the program -- as well as by increasing the amount of tax and recognizing the federal responsibility through provision for contributions from general revenues, with matching grants for high cost states.

It is essential that this system be administered with both justice and firmness. We know some workers have been denied benefits when justice required payment. We also know some workers have been granted benefits when firmness required their denial. For this reason the proposed legislation calls for steps which will help assure that benefits are paid only to those who are entitled to them and that unreasonable disqualifications are eliminated.

SECTION 14 (b) OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Finally, with the hope of reducing conflicts in our national labor policy that for several years have divided Americans in various states, I recommend the repeal of section 14 (b) of the Taft-Hartley Act with such other technical changes as are made necessary by this action.

I urge that early and favorable consideration be given to the enactment of these three legislative proposals.

Lyndon B. Johnson

FARM MESSAGE SEPARATES SOCIAL, COMMERCIAL AIMS

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Feb. 4 Message to Congress on Agriculture:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The bounty of the earth is the foundation of our economy.

Progress in every aspect of our nation's life depends upon the abundant harvest of our farms.

Because 7 percent of our work force can produce our food and fiber, the vast majority of Americans can work at other tasks that make our democracy strong and prosperous.

Because our people eat better at less cost than any other people in all the world's history, we can spend our earnings for the many other things which make life rewarding.

Because we have the means to conquer hunger, we can wage an unconditional war on poverty -- and win it.

The farm people of this nation have made and are continuing to make a lasting contribution to our national prosperity. As a matter of simple justice they should share equitably in this prosperity. They deserve a place of dignity and opportunity.

Farmers want new and expanding markets for their efficient production. Farmers want freedom to grow and prosper, freedom to operate competitively and profitably in our present economic system.

As a nation we are increasingly recognizing that food and agricultural policies affect our entire economy. Sound agricultural policy must give full consideration not only to the role of the producer, but also to the processor, the distributor, the exporter, and the ultimate consumer. This is one major reason for a national investment in agricultural programs.

Farm policy is not something separate. It is part of an overall effort to serve our national interest, at home and around the world.

WHAT WE WANT TO DO

These are the objectives which should guide us:

1. An abundance of food and fiber at reasonable and stable prices for the people of the United States.

2. Effective use of our agricultural resources to promote the interests of the United States and world peace through trade and aid.

3. A workable balance between supply and demand at lower costs to the Government.

4. Opportunity for the efficient family farmer to earn parity of income from farming operations.

5. Parity of opportunity for all rural people, including new opportunity for small farmers.

The gains which we have made in the past four years -- in raising farm income, in reducing surplus stocks, in promoting new economic opportunity in rural areas -- point the direction we should continue to follow.

THE RURAL SCENE

Rural America is the scene of one of the greatest productive triumphs in the history of man. Yet, despite its service to the nation, rural America is also the scene of wasted human talent, where there are too many people without jobs and too many with only part-time jobs.

Opportunity in rural America will require wise farm programs to support and stabilize the incomes of commercial family farmers. It will require solutions to the problems of small farmers and those who live in the towns and villages of rural America.

Only one of four rural families now lives on a farm. Only one out of ten boys now growing up on farms can expect to earn a good living as a full-time farmer. Most young people in rural areas must go elsewhere to find their opportunities.

I am determined that the farmers who have been efficient and successful in agriculture shall be fairly rewarded for their success. And I am equally determined that the rural community which has sustained the growth of agriculture shall have the chance to broaden its economic base and the range of opportunity which it can offer the children of its families.

To the White House in recent months have come hundreds and thousands of letters from men and women who live in rural America. Their words are eloquent testimony to the changes which are occurring there and to the uncertainty which those changes are causing.

...Thirty years ago, over seven million American families lived on the farm. Today, 3-1/2 million families feed a population that has grown by 50%. Enough food is left over to fight hunger among free people all around the globe.

...Thirty years ago, a good farm in the Midwest operated with a capital investment of $18,000. Today, nearly $100,000 is needed. In the Southeast, capital requirements rose from $4,500 to $30,000.

Farmers with inadequate resources make up one segment of rural America's great unsolved problem of underemployment. Another is made up of families who have left the farm but have not yet found a place in the non-agricultural sector of the economy. A third consists of families displaced by the decline in the rural-based extractive industries -- mining and lumbering.

The rural unemployed and underemployed are largely out of sight. Most of them are hidden in the remote valleys of Appalachia and the Ozarks, on the unpaved side roads of the South, in the once-rich timber lands of the North, on Indian reservations, and in the worn out mining communities of the West.

The results of opportunity's decline in rural America are reflected in harsh facts:

...Lack of a decent life is almost twice as prevalent in rural America as it is in urban America. Only 30 percent of our families live in rural areas, but 46 percent of them have incomes under $3,000.

...Rural America has almost three times the proportion of substandard houses found in urban areas. A fourth of all farm homes and a fifth of rural non-farm homes are without running water. Over 14,000 rural communities of more than 100 population lack central water supplies.

...Rural people lag almost two years behind urban residents in education attainment. They often suffer from a lower quality of education. Per pupil expenditures for elementary and secondary education in rural school districts are substantially below expenditures in urban districts.

...Rural communities lag in health facilities. Rural children receive one-third less medical attention than urban children. Their mortality rate is far higher.

These deficiencies feed on one another. They leave too few resources to support education, health and other public services essential to development of the talent, skills, and earning power of the people.

PARITY OF OPPORTUNITY FOR RURAL AMERICA

These facts require a national policy for rural America with parity of opportunity as its goal.

There has been a steady migration from our countryside. In the 1950s more than half of America's rural counties suffered a population loss. But farmers who are handicapped by poor health, age, or lack of skill in any occupation outside of farming and who leave their home communities for want of opportunity often create new problems -- for themselves, for the communities they leave, and for the cities which receive them.

When people move away from rural areas, the area suffers. Migration leaves vacant stores, abandoned churches, empty schoolrooms, declining tax bases, and a declining ability to support a minimum level of public service.

This is what we need to have parity of opportunity for rural Americans:

...National economic prosperity to increase their employment opportunities;

...Full access to education, training, and health services to expand their earning power, and

...Economic development of smaller and medium-sized communities to insure a healthy economic base for rural America.

When the rural citizen, his community, business and government cooperate, the chances for a better rural life increase. Local leadership and initiative are necessary if rural development is to keep pace with the needs of the people. But government can and should provide information as well as the technical and financial assistance which will speed progress.

Many measures enacted by the Congress in recent years are assisting rural communities in building new opportunities for their citizens. Others I have recommended this year aim at these same objectives.

The Area Redevelopment Act has helped scores of small and medium-sized communities through loans to new industrial enterprises and loans and grants for needed public facilities. I will soon make recommendations that will urge this Act be improved and made permanent.

Under the Economic Opportunity Act, communities will be carrying out programs to provide new opportunity for low-income rural families.

The Department of Agriculture has a wide range of programs to assist in rural economic development -- loans for telephone systems, for recreation enterprises, for development of forest resources, for community water systems, and for rural housing. The small watershed and resources conservation and development programs add to business activity in rural areas.

The development of new job opportunities in rural areas has been considerably aided in the past by a strong program of rural electrification. The ability of rural areas to attract and support industrial activities -- one of the fundamental solutions to the basic problem of our farm population -- rests in very large part upon the availability of electric power. We must and will continue our efforts to enable those areas that do not presently possess an adequate power supply to meet their growing demands and insure that the benefits of industrial diversification are available in rural areas.

Many other activities of the Government are assisting businessmen and farmers to revive dying economies and raise the level of public services in rural areas. These include aid for community facilities, employment services, health and education programs, small business loans, job training, and development of outdoor recreation.

Yet gaps remain between the levels of living in rural America and those of urban America: in income, in education, in housing, in health and sanitation facilities. Parity of opportunity remains a distant hope for many. It is a challenge we must meet head-on.

REACHING OUT TO RURAL AREAS

In my earlier messages to the Congress, particularly those on education and health, I have proposed measures to assist those areas of our country and those families most in need, both urban and rural.

It is not easy to equitably distribute federal assistance to a scattered rural population. Rural communities often lack the specialized organizations found in major cities which keep informed of development programs and initiate action to make use of them. Special measures must be taken both by the states, and by federal agencies to reach rural people, particularly in remote areas.

Since it is clear that an administrative office for each federal agency or program cannot and should not be established in every county, a method must be developed to extend the reach of those federal agencies and programs which should, but do not now, effectively serve rural areas.

Accordingly, I have asked:

1. Each Department and agency administering a program which can benefit rural people to assure that its benefits are distributed equitably between urban and rural areas.

2. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Director of the Budget to review carefully with the head of each Department or agency involved, the administrative obstacles which may stand in the way of such equitable distribution. They should propose administrative or legislative steps which can be taken to assure that equity is attained to assure full participation by rural areas.

3. The Secretary of Agriculture to put the facilities of his field offices at the disposal of all federal agencies to assist them in making their programs effective in rural areas. The Secretary is creating within the Department of Agriculture a Rural Community Development Service, which will have no operating programs of its own but will devote its energies to assisting other agencies in extending their services. I have requested funds in the 1966 budget to finance this service and to strengthen the capacity of the Cooperative Federal-State Extension Service to assist rural communities in forming strong and active development organizations.

In the meantime, I recommend that the Congress:

1. Enact legislation to equalize the availability of home mortgage credit in rural areas. This can be done by supplementing the mortgage insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration with a rural mortgage insurance program to be administered by the Department of Agriculture. The Department has administered a direct housing loan program since 1949. But an insurance program will enable the Government to assist effectively a far greater volume of home building with a minimum of budget costs. The Federal Housing Administration has initiated action to extend the effectiveness of its insurance programs in areas where private lenders do not now fully utilize its services.

2. Increase the annual limit upon the Department of Agriculture's existing loan insurance program, which insures not only farm ownership loans but loans for community water systems and recreation development.

We have the opportunity now to provide the means by which people in rural towns and on inadequate farms can join the march toward a better life. We must seize this opportunity.

PARITY OF INCOME FOR AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

The commodity programs which were initiated 30 years ago in the Administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt have helped to create a commercially successful agriculture. I propose that these commodity programs be continued and improved.

Over the past four years our commodity programs have raised and sustained net farm income at an annual level nearly $1 billion above 1960. Few activities so dramatically indicate the value to farmers of good programs well administered. Yet the consumer is the major beneficiary of farm progress. While retail food prices have risen in recent years, the prices of what the farmer sells have actually declined 15 percent since 1947-49.

Our agricultural abundance has also made possible the food stamp, school lunch, surplus food distribution, and special milk programs. These projects are essential to our needy people and to our school children.

The skill of our family farmers is not an accident. It is the product of a century of public policy aimed at improvement of our agriculture.

Research and education, credit and conservation, and price stabilization have all served us well. They have benefited all Americans, though they were designed as programs for farmers.

Progress is never free of problems. Agricultural progress has made price and income support programs increasingly necessary and increasingly difficult.

The basic need for farm programs arises from the farmer's economic isolation and his enormous capacity to produce. We have today at least 50 million acres more cropland than is required to produce all of the food and fiber that we can consume plus all we can export. Without programs to guide production, new crop surpluses would be inevitable. Even a relatively small surplus can depress prices below cost of production levels.

Independent studies by university economists are unanimous in their basic conclusion: the removal of price and income supports would have a catastrophic effect upon farm income.

For three decades we have had programs which, by one means or another, have sought to achieve a balance between supply and demand. Born in the emergency of the 1930s, they have countered the income-depressing potential of the revolution in agricultural production.

Our farm programs must always be focused more precisely on the opportunity for parity of income for America's family farmers and lower Government costs. But we must recognize that farm programs will be necessary as long as advance in agricultural technology continues to outpace the growth of population at home and markets abroad.

We need to change much of our thinking on farm policy. Just as we do in other segments of our economy, we need to separate the social problems of rural America from the economic problems of commercial agriculture. We need to be concerned about both, but the answers to each may be different.

Our programs should:

...provide efficient family farmers an opportunity to earn parity of income.

...assist those small farmers who have little chance to enlarge their operations but whose age, physical handicap, or lack of education, prevent their shifting to other employment.

...assist those farm families who seek to enlarge their productive resources in order to obtain a decent living and have the opportunity and capacity to do so.

We must also continue to tie domestic farm policies to our international trade objectives by pricing our products for export at competitive world levels and by relating our production to the longer-term demands of world markets.

Our objective must be for the farmer to get improved income out of the market place, with less cost to the Government.

To do this, I am asking the Secretary of Agriculture to so utilize the Commodity Credit Corporation as to make the free market system work more effectively for the farmer. We must encourage the private segment of our economy to carry its own inventories, bought from farmers, rather than depending on the Government as a source of supply. We must urge the private sector to perform as many services as possible now performed by Government agencies.

PRICE SUPPORT AND PRODUCTION ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

I recommend to the Congress that the programs now in effect for our major commodities be continued and improved.

These programs can continue to serve our objectives of increased freedom of operation, a steady improvement of incomes, a greater reliance on market forces, and lower Government costs.

Building on present programs, I recommend the following legislation:

Wheat and Feed Grain

Voluntary feed grain and wheat programs should be extended. Specific recommendations will be transmitted to the Congress which will permit the operation of these programs to be simplified and make it possible for additional crops -- particularly soybeans -- to be grown as needed on acreage diverted from grains.

Authority should be continued for the Secretary of Agriculture to set price support levels and to adjust other program features as conditions may require.

Cotton

The cotton program of 1964 should also be extended and improved. It is essential that cotton be competitive with other fibers and in world markets. At the same time we must adopt measures to reduce the cost of this program and the level of stocks. Specific amendments to current legislation will be suggested to accomplish these objectives.

Tobacco

The tobacco program must also be reappraised this year. Yield increases, higher Government costs, deterioration in quality and loss of foreign markets have weakened what has been a highly successful program.

Legislation is needed to authorize production and marketing limits on an acreage-poundage basis. Consideration should also be given to revisions in our programs which will make American tobacco more competitive in world markets.

Rice

Consideration should be given to amending the price support program for rice to support market prices at competitive world levels, and to provide additional supports for producer incomes from the proceeds of marketing certificates.

Wool

The Wool Act which expires early next year is operating successfully to help stabilize wool production and bolster producer income. I recommend that it be extended with minor amendments which will be transmitted to the Congress.

Livestock

The sale of meat animals amounts to nearly one-third of all farm income. The stability of this vital phase of our farm economy is based on the continued stability in our feed supply.

We will continue to cooperate with livestock farmers and ranchers so as to maintain a fair price in the market place. We will help them to build markets here and abroad, and to preserve fair competition in the marketing of livestock and livestock products, and continue our present measures which will prevent an undue increase in imports.

Other Commodities

Continuing study is being given to programs and needs for other agricultural commodities and appropriate changes and recommendations will be made as circumstances may require.

TRANSFER OF ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

I recommend that acreage allotments and bases under the several production adjustment programs be made transferable by lease or sale to family farmers in the same state.

This will permit some small farmers to expand their acreage. Others who no longer wish to farm can add to their incomes by leasing or selling their allotments.

LONG-RANGE CROPLAND ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

The annual acreage diversion and acreage allotment programs now in effect should be supplemented by a long-term Cropland Adjustment Program.

I recommend to the Congress a program which will reduce the cost of our production adjustment efforts, assist landowners in turning their land to nonagricultural uses such as recreation and to forestry, and assist small farmers who want to do other work while remaining in their communities. The proportion of land which could be covered by this program in any area should be limited to protect our communities.

Agriculture's excess production capacity is a long-run problem. A long-term land use program can achieve a large part of the needed adjustment more effectively and with greater benefits than annual diversion programs.

This program will reduce the annual cost of other programs by more than its own cost. It will provide enduring benefits not realized under present programs.

The purposes of the Cropland Adjustment Program will be served if much of the land is permanently removed from production. Every reason exists, therefore, for applying a contribution from this program to the cost of public purchases of cropland for recreation, for enhancement of natural beauty, for prevention of air and water pollution, or for open space purposes.

I recommend that the authorizing legislation permit funds appropriated for cropland adjustment to be used to augment monies raised by states and local governments and those which are provided by the Federal Government through the Land and Water Conservation Fund and other programs for public land acquisition.

RESERVE STOCKS

It is time to consider our requirements for agricultural commodities in a reserve for national security, for emergency relief purposes, and for domestic economic statilization.

The President should be authorized to determine the levels of commodity stocks required and to take actions to insulate these stocks from the market so that they might be preserved for time of emergencies.

The costs incurred in maintaining that part of our commodity stocks designated as reserves should be separated from the cost of farm price and income support programs. The Commodity Credit Corporation would continue to manage the stocks in conjunction with price support operations.

AGRICULTURE TRADE

The welfare of American agriculture is closely linked to foreign trade. Our 1968 goal of $6 billion farm product exports was reached in 1964. American farmers last year accounted for one-fourth of U.S. merchandise exports.

These exports have strengthened farm prices, brought additional business income, reduced our surpluses and storage costs, and have helped our international balance of payments. Abroad, they have contributed to political stability and economic progress.

We are not content with the gains we have made in world markets. We expect to make additional gains by improving the means by which we can be competitive in price, in quality, in service to our customers. We will merchandise our products actively, but with full regard to rules of commercial conduct between friendly nations.

In the trade negotiations underway in Geneva, we shall make every effort to achieve liberalization in agricultural as well as industrial products.

World Progress and Peace

The Food for Peace program is good international policy and it is sound economic policy. Food is a powerful weapon for peace. People who are hungry are weak allies of freedom. Men with empty stomachs do not reason together.

We broadened the Food for Peace program last year and are continuing to study ways to broaden it further. Food shipments under this program help to expand it by building food habits which increase the demand for United States products. As the economies of recipient countries are strengthened through American aid, we are able to shift from outright grants of food to concessional sales for foreign currencies and later to sales for dollars.

Foreign currencies accruing from the sales of commodities under the Food for Peace Program have also provided funds for a world-wide market development program, which has played a significant role in bringing about the dramatic increases in commercial farm exports.

This same program has also strengthened growing economies, contributed to rising standards of living, promoted international stability, and literally saved lives in many less developed countries. Our agricultural resources are thus making a significant contribution to the prospects for peace in the world.

These contributions must continue. They will be increasingly directed toward assisting agricultural development in less developed, densely populated countries, thus fostering over-all economic growth, higher living standards and better nutrition. The disturbing downward trends in food output per person in both Asia and Latin America in recent years must be reversed. And these trends can be arrested and reversed only by a massive mobilization of resources in both the food-deficit countries and the advanced countries of the industrial West.

As I pointed out in my message on foreign aid, we must use both our agricultural abundance and our technical skills in agriculture to assist the developing nations to stand on their own feet. Under our assistance programs we will make full use of the agricultural know-how in the Department of Agriculture and in the land grant colleges and state universities. We will enlist the support and cooperation of private agencies and enterprises of all kinds.

To make this food aid most effective, we plan to gear our Food for Peace programs more specifically to the needs of recipient countries and their economic development programs. We may need more flexibility to assure proper nutritional balance in these programs, particularly as they relate to child feeding.

I am asking the Secretary of Agriculture and others concerned to study and recommend changes in agricultural policy that may be needed to accomplish these goals.

Commission on U.S. Food and Fiber Policy

All Americans have shared in the fruits of an efficient agriculture. All Americans share also the problems we face in the farm economy and in rural America in the years ahead.

Accordingly, to assist in adapting our farm programs to the needs of tomorrow, and in making rural America a full partner in our national economic progress, I intend to conduct a fundamental examination of the entire agriculture policy of the United States. I will reorganize the National Agricultural Advisory Commission -- which has made an invaluable contribution in years past -- into a new Commission on Food and Fiber. It will be broadly representative of rural communities, consumers, producers, industry, government, and the public. I expect it to make a detailed study of our food and fiber policies and to bring additional viewpoints to bear on the place of rural America.

* * * * *

There are other parts of our agriculture which merit the support of Congress and the attention of all Americans. Conservation of agricultural land is making a contribution to the beauty and the development of our nation. It can help even more as we attack pollution of our streams and the defacement of our landscape. Research and education must continue to speed our progress in agriculture, to insure the protection of consumers, and to make full opportunity more than a distant hope.

We must win the battle for a better diet. At the same time we must increase the demand for farm products. If the income of all low-income families were brought up to the $3,000 annual level, per capita consumption of all food would rise by 2 percent. Meat consumption among these low-income families would rise by 15 to 20 percent; poultry by 10 to 15 percent; milk products by about 7 percent and fresh fruits and vegetables by 15 to 20 percent.

The Congress has repeatedly enacted legislation to encourage farmers to improve their economic position through cooperatives. This encouragement and assistance will be carried out, in terms of both the letter and the spirit of the law.

The task of achieving a life of quality and dignity in rural as well as in urban America is one that will engage our minds and hearts and our energies for a lifetime.

We begin with the conviction that this is a goal which is right. We go forward with the knowledge that the unparalleled harvest of today's rural America has been achieved because our ancestors said this too was a reasonable goal.

The path we follow may be long. But I am as certain of eventual success as was President Abraham Lincoln when he founded the Department of Agriculture a century ago and thus started us on the path to abundance.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S REQUEST FOR FARM LEGISLATION

Following is the complete text of an April 5 letter from President Johnson to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on proposed farm legislation:

Dear Mr. President: (Dear Mr. Speaker:)

FIVE BASIC OBJECTIVES

We have set forth five basic policy objectives for our programs in agriculture and the rural community:

- An abundance of food and fiber at reasonable and stable prices for the people of the United States;
- A workable balance between supply and demand at lower costs to the Government;
- Opportunity for the efficient family farmer to earn parity of income from farming operations;
- Parity of opportunity for all rural people, including new opportunity for small farmers; and,
- Effective use of our agricultural resources to promote the interest of the United States and world peace through trade and aid.

The legislative proposals for farm commodity programs which are transmitted herewith have been prepared within the framework of these policy guides. We seek no banner to wave for partisan advantage; we seek to find in this most difficult area the means by which American agriculture and the family farm can share in our rich and growing economy as fully as they contribute to it.

For more than three decades, and particularly since the end of World War II, the United States has experienced a staggering revolution in the techniques of farming. Science and technology, applied to agronomy and animal husbandry, have brought the American people a greater abundance of food and fiber than the citizens of any nation in history have ever known. Prior to the Second World War, farming productivity was increasing at only half the rate of industrial growth; but since 1945, it has increased at twice the speed of industrial growth.

As a result, food expenditures today take a smaller part of the family income than ever before. Less than one dollar of take-home pay out of every five is spent for food, and the proportion continues to decline.

However, the enormous advances in agricultural efficiency have left the farmer working harder and enjoying it less. Prices for his products are 5 percent lower today than 15 years ago. Only a small fraction of our farmers earn parity of income -- returns comparable to earnings for similar work and investment. Many farmers do not even earn the minimum wage.

This inadequate return to the farmer is a consequence of the revolution of abundance in agriculture. If productivity in industry had increased in the past decade at the same rate as in agriculture, the 1963 level of industrial output could have been produced with 8 million fewer workers than were actually employed.

COMMODITY PROGRAMS

Commodity programs are the primary instrument which the farmer and the national economy use to cushion the force of the "output revolution." So long as the advance in agricultural technology continues to outpace the growth of population at home and the markets abroad, farm commodity programs will continue to be an indispensable element of national economic policy.

Even with commodity programs, the farms which require substantially more labor than the farm family can provide have declined in number in the postwar period; only the family farm with adequate resources has grown in number and in the volume of output. All others have declined.

The sensible policy for commercial agriculture is not to do away with commodity programs, but to improve them so that agriculture will provide an opportunity to earn a parity income for that growing group of farm families on farms large enough to be efficient.

FOOD MARKETING

In a real sense, the legislative proposals transmitted herewith do more than modify and extend commodity programs. They seek also to apply the forces of a vigorous marketplace to the needs of commercial agriculture so that we can turn more of our attention and more of our tax dollars to revitalizing rural life and rooting out the poverty which is all too prevalent in rural America.

The proposals provide, particularly in the case of wheat and rice, that the farmer should look to the marketplace for the dollars which will bring him closer to parity of income.

There was a time when the cost of food at the farm translated nearly dollar for dollar into retail food costs. That is no longer the case. Today, when marketing charges account for nearly two-thirds of retail food prices, even a significant rise in farm prices has far less impact than do changes in non-farm cost. A 50 cent increase in the price of a bushel of wheat for example will increase the cost of a loaf of bread by little more than one cent.

The modifications in commodity programs also take into account world markets. Price and income support programs should not prevent the American farmer from competing effectively in world markets. The market prices for commodities under the proposals would be near world levels, as are the prices for feed grains and soybeans now.

We propose to compete fairly and vigorously for the fast growing markets in the world. From 1958 to 1964, while the dollar value of farm products sold domestically rose by less than a billion, the dollar sales of food and fiber exports increased by nearly $2.5 billion. The new commodity proposals will help to keep us competitive in world markets, sharing fully in future growth of food and fiber trade.

CROPLAND RETIREMENT

We also seek to find less costly means to achieve needed adjustments in production. Thus, the proposal for a Cropland Adjustment Program is designed to remove up to 40 million acres of cropland through long-term contracts. We now have over 55 million acres of cropland out of production annually, most of it under the year-to-year diversions features of individual commodity programs. In the first year, with only 8 million acres in the program, we estimate the savings from the Cropland Adjustment Program compared with annual programs will be about $35 million.

The Cropland Adjustment Program, combined with the individual commodity programs, will provide the best and least costly means of bringing production into balance with domestic needs and export opportunities. Thus, the policies for commercial agriculture contained in this legislation are so constructed that all parts acting together provide an effective means of bridging the gap between the farmer and national prosperity while they provide all our people with continued access to food and fiber abundance.

WHEAT

Title I of the draft bill would extend for two years, with amendments, the voluntary wheat marketing certificate program enacted by the Congress last year for the 1964 and 1965 crops of wheat. This program has reduced government costs, and has given wheat farmers added flexibility especially valuable where crop alternatives are limited. In order to provide adequate support to the incomes of wheat producers while further reducing costs to the government and increasing our reliance on the market, the maximum level of price support which the Secretary could provide for wheat processed for use as food in the United States would be increased from 90 to 100 percent of parity. The Secretary could permit producers voluntarily to divert up to 50 percent instead of 20 percent of their allotted acreage from production, and the Secretary would be given additional discretion in establishing diversion payment rates. Other major provisions would be continued. The wheat program enacted in the Agricultural Act of 1962 would be inoperative until the 1968 crop.

FEED GRAINS

Title II of the draft bill would extend for another two years the voluntary feed grain program first enacted on an emergency basis in 1961. This program has raised the income of feed grain producers, reduced surplus stocks by nearly 30 million tons, given farmers maximum flexibility of operation within a framework of price supports, and has provided needed stability for the livestock industry. The feed grain program would be amended to give the Secretary discretion to establish acreage diversion and price support payment rates at levels designed to meet the objectives of the program. In addition, the production of soybeans could be encouraged under new authority.

RICE

Title III of the draft bill would provide for two years for major amendments in the method of making price support available to producers of rice. The proposed marketing certificate program would follow the principle of the wheat marketing certificate program first enacted by the Congress in 1962 and reenacted in 1964, of providing substantial income support from domestic consumption, while supporting market prices near world levels. The Secretary would be authorized to provide price support through the mechanism of both loans and marketing certificates on the quantity of rice produced for the domestic market, in a range of 65 to 100 percent of parity. Price support for rice produced for export would be provided to producers only through loans. The level of price support loans would be related primarily to world market prices. Marketing certificates would be issued to farmers on a graduated scale in order to provide small producers somewhat higher average unit returns than larger producers. Provisions for acreage allotments and marketing quotas for rice which have operated for many years would remain in effect. The proposed revision in the method of supporting rice prices would make it possible to continue to support the incomes of rice growers while reducing government expenditures and placing more reliance on the domestic market to return adequate incomes to growers. The Secretary would be authorized to take such actions as he determined to be necessary to assist the industry in making the transition from the current program to the proposed program. Existing provisions of law with regard to price supports for rice would be suspended until 1968.

WOOL

Title IV of the draft bill would provide for a two-year extension and for further amendment of the Wool Act of 1954, as amended. This Act has operated successfully to help stabilize wool production and bolster incomes of wool producers. Funds are provided out of customs receipts on imported wool and wool products. Amendments are proposed which would authorize the Secretary to take into account the production and the prices of lambs in determining the level price support for wool, and would remove the present requirement that the Secretary set wool price supports at levels which would encourage the production of up to 360 million pounds of wool in the United States. In addition, provision is made for graduating incentive payments according to the quantity of wool produced in order to provide higher returns to small producers.

CROPLAND ADJUSTMENT

Title V of the draft bill would provide a long-term cropland adjustment program to supplement the annual acreage diversion programs in achieving and maintaining a supply-demand balance for farm products. It is expected that substantial savings would be realized under this program compared with annual diversion under the feed grain and wheat programs. The program is designed not only to supplement the commodity programs, but also to enable elderly farmers to retire from farming while continuing to live on their farms, to assist farmers who want to reduce their farming operations in order to shift to other employment, to conserve natural resources and add to the beauty of the countryside, and to improve the quality of rural and urban life. This program would amend the Soil Bank Act to authorize the Secretary to enter into 5 to 10 year contracts during the period 1965-70 for the diversion of cropland to conservation uses. The Secretary could provide for such payments as would be necessary to encourage producers to enter into such contracts. Provision would be made also for the Secretary to cooperate with other federal, state and local agencies in permanently shifting cropland into public uses such as parks or recreational areas. Grazing or other agricultural uses of land contracted under this program would be prohibited except in case of emergencies. Local communities would be protected by a limitation on the percentage of the cropland acreage in any area that could be contracted. We are convinced that a long-term cropland adjustment program can provide not only substantial savings to the Government, and new opportunities for rural people, but also for long-range remedial action which will benefit the farm economy.

TRANSFER OF ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

Title VI of the draft bill would give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to provide for the lease and sale of acreage allotments under the production adjustment programs of the Department of Agriculture. Such transfers would be limited to family-sized farms in the state of origin of the allotment. Small farmers who decide to stop farming or who have stopped farming can realize the value of their allotments while retaining their farms under this title. Operators of family-sized farms who wish to continue and to expand their farming operations could have the opportunity to increase their acreage of allotment crops.

COTTON

We are continuing to study and to discuss with producers and the industry the means by which the cotton program can be improved so as to reduce the cost of the program and the level of cotton stocks while keeping cotton competitive with other fibers and in world markets.

Enclosed is a more detailed summary of the provisions of the proposed bill.

I urge that the Congress give these proposals prompt consideration.

Sincerely,

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S REQUEST FOR UN CHARTER REVISION

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's April 6 message to the Senate requesting consent to ratification of amendments to the United Nations Charter:

TO THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

I request the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification of two amendments to the Charter of the United Nations which are transmitted herewith along with a report to me from the Secretary of State. They are the first amendments adopted by the General Assembly since the founding of the United Nations.

These amendments will strengthen the ability of the United Nations to act as a force for peace and the progress of mankind.

They enlarge the membership of both the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council to bring those bodies into balance with the enlarged membership of the United Nations itself.

HISTORY OF THE AMENDMENTS

Amendments to the Charter of the United Nations must first be adopted by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly, and then ratified by two-thirds of the Member States, including all the Permanent Members, according to their constitutional procedure.

In late 1963, the General Assembly considered resolutions proposing the two amendments in question. These resolutions focussed on three points:

First, that the text of the United Nations Charter be changed to increase the size of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, to increase the voting majority of the Security Council from seven to nine, and to increase the size of the Economic and Social Council from eighteen to twenty-seven. In the Security Council, neither the seats nor the right of veto of the Permanent Members would be affected.

Second, the resolutions provided that Members of the two Councils be elected on the basis of geographic distribution.

In the Security Council, the ten non-Permanent Members would include five from Africa and Asia, one from Eastern Europe, two from Latin America, and two from Western Europe and other areas; the five Permanent Members would remain the same. The present non-Permanent Membership of the Security Council includes two Members from Africa and Asia, two from Latin America, one from Western Europe, and one seat split between Asia and Eastern Europe.

In the Economic and Social Council, there would be the United States, twelve African and Asian states, five Latin American states, three Eastern European states (including the Soviet Union), and six states from Western Europe and other areas. The present composition of the Economic and Social Council, in addition to the United States, is five African and Asian states, four Latin American states, three Eastern European states (including the Soviet Union), and five states from Western Europe and other areas.

Third, the resolutions proposed that Member States ratify the amendments by September 1, 1965.

On December 17, 1963, the resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly. On the enlargement of the Security Council, the vote was ninety-seven to eleven, with four abstentions; on the enlargement of the Economic and Social Council, it was ninety-six to eleven, with five abstentions.

In those votes, the United States abstained, not because it doubted the principle of enlargement, but to maintain complete freedom of action while giving deliberate study to the effects of the specific proposals. The Soviet Union and France voted negatively. China voted for enlargement of the Security Council but abstained on enlargement of the Economic and Social Council. The United Kingdom abstained on both resolutions.

Since that time, sixty-three nations out of the required seventy-six have ratified the amendments. Other governments are now considering them. Of the Permanent Members of the Security Council, the Soviet Union has been the first to approve the amendments.

REASONS FOR RATIFICATION

The United States should now move to ratify the Charter amendments to enlarge the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.

First, the amendments are realistic.

The membership of the United Nations has grown from fifty-one in 1945 to one hundred and fourteen in 1965. Almost all of the newer Members are nations which have gained their independence from the peaceful dismantling of empires -- a process which brought nationhood to one-third of all the peoples of the world and which is here to stay.

We welcome this growth.

The peoples of the world are more directly represented in the General Assembly of the United Nations today than they were twenty years ago.

We want to work together and cooperate with these new countries, within the United Nations.

If there are differences among us, we want them to be aired and examined within the United Nations.

This is the way to a peaceful and cooperative world.

But just as we welcome the growth of the United Nations, we must also recognize that the present Security Council and the present Economic and Social Council do not now realistically reflect it.

An increase in the representation on both Councils is now clearly necessary to restore the balance which existed between the Councils and the General Assembly when the Charter came into force. An expansion of fifty percent in the case of the Economic and Social Council and less in the Security Council is a reasonable way to adjust to a Membership which has more than doubled. At the same time, the expansion is not such as to make the Councils unwieldy.

Second, the amendments are equitable.

When the Charter was signed in 1945, the Member States from Africa and Asia numbered thirteen out of a total of fifty-one -- less than a third. Today, the Member States from these great continents number sixty-one out of a total of one hundred and fourteen -- more than a half. The General Assembly resolutions, necessarily and rightly, take this new arithmetic into account.

Moreoever, the explicit allocation of the new seats to geographic areas, as provided by Assembly Resolution, is wise. It is designed to eliminate the contentious problem of sharing an inadequate number of seats -- which had led to pressures against existing seats, to disputes over the definition of geographic areas, and to split terms on the Security Council to meet competing claims for representation.

Third, the amendments fully protect the basic interests of the Permanent Members. While we have seen that the work of the Security Council can be hampered seriously by the abuse of the veto provision, it nevertheless remains a wise and realistic feature of the United Nations Charter. The veto provision is maintained.

Fourth, because the amendments are at once realistic and equitable, they will strengthen the United Nations.

They will increase the vitality of these Councils and of the United Nations itself by permitting more of the newer Members to take part in the consideration of major world problems.

The amendments, which will ensure that the Councils represent the whole Organization they are intended to serve, will thereby also ensure that the Councils continue to earn the confidence and support of the Membership at large. Without this confidence and support, the Councils cannot be fully effective.

The Organization as a whole will benefit from fuller participation in the work of the Councils by the new Members who have much to contribute -- as they will benefit from the exercise of shared responsibility.

Fifth and finally, the amendments are a reflection and a demonstration of both the stability and the adaptability of the United Nations Charter.

We Americans have always had a healthy respect for the stability of our institutions and a wariness of change for the sake of change. Our American Constitution, which has been amended only fourteen times since the Bill of Rights of 1791, has clearly met the test of stability. The fact that the United Nations Charter has remained as it was written twenty years ago is ample evidence of its stability.

At the same time, we Americans have always recognized the forces of change, and have always known instinctively that the ability of an institution to adapt to changed conditions is a reliable measure of its capacity for survival and growth. Our American Constitution, as evidenced by its amendments, has clearly met this test of adaptability.

Now, with its twentieth birthday approaching, the United Nations is seeking the first two amendments to its basic Charter. And this is welcome evidence of the inherent flexibility of another great institution.

THE STATE OF THE UNITED NATIONS

As we consider these first amendments to the United Nations Charter, it is fitting to review briefly the state of the United Nations itself.

The limitations of the United Nations are apparent. It has not been able to prevent aggression in Southeast Asia; it has not been able to rid the world of poverty.

Nor has the United Nations been able to solve all of its internal problems. At the present time a serious financial problem threatens the capacity of the General Assembly to perform its share of peacekeeping.

And if the limitations are clear, the basic reason is plain. The United Nations is not a world government; it is an organization of governments participating by consent. It can move only in the direction and at the pace that its Members want it to move.

And yet the United Nations has served well the cause of world peace and progress -- and, therefore, the national interest and the personal interest of every American.

KEEPING THE PEACE

Through the United Nations, the Members have acted to avert wars on at least a dozen occasions -- local wars which could have spread.

In Kashmir, the United Nations obtained and still polices a cease-fire line running through a bitterly contested area.

In Suez, the United Nations deployed an Emergency Force which enabled the respective national military forces to withdraw.

In the Congo, the United Nations provided 20,000 troops, assisted a new nation to survive its birth, and forestalled an east-west confrontation in the heart of Africa.

In Cyprus, the United Nations has stationed a force of 6,000 to strenghen that nation's security.

The office of the Secretary-General has evolved into a sensitive listening post -- an ever-ready channel of communication -- a potential conciliation service open at all times to the international community of states.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

At the same time, the day-to-day work of the United Nations is directed overwhelmingly toward building conditions which make the peace worth keeping.

United Nations experts are now at work in one hundred and thirty countries or territories -- bringing modern knowledge and technology to bear on the universal struggle to liberate man from the slavery of poverty.

The United Nations is in partnership with eighty-nine nations and territories in cooperative pre-investment projects -- surveying resources or training men and women in modern skills.

The development lending institutions affiliated with the United Nations have been investing some $1 billion annually in world development.

All in all, the level of development assistance flowing through the United Nations system of agencies now has reached some $1.3 billion a year.

TECHNOLOGICAL COOPERATION

Meanwhile, United Nations agencies are performing the vital task of establishing cooperative ground rules which are required in the age of rapid international transport and instant international communication.

Agencies affiliated with the United Nations have developed standards for international air traffic -- and for the safety of life at sea.

They have arranged for orderly use of the airwaves by allocating available radio frequencies among nations and users.

They have promoted international weather forecasting and are pioneering in the development of a World Weather Watch of incalculable benefit to peoples of all nations.

They have developed and maintained uniform international quarantine regulations against the spread of communicable diseases -- and liberated 800 million people from the threat of the greatest killer of all time: malaria.

In these and other ways -- through peacekeeping, through nation-building, and through international technical services -- the United Nations serves its Members. In doing so, the Organization serves the national interest of the United States. It helps us do things we could not do so well alone and encourages other nations to share the burdens.

CONCLUSION

In one sense, the smallest Members are in greatest need of the United Nations.

In another sense, the United Nations is of greatest service to the largest nations -- for without the United Nations, the nations with the greatest resources would have to shoulder most of these tasks alone.

And in a combined sense, the United Nations serves simultaneously the large and the small, the rich and the poor -- for the peace of one area is but part of world peace, and the prosperity of one country is but an element of the world's well-being.

This is why consistent and effective support for the United Nations has been near the heart of the United States foreign policy for two decades.

This is why the Congress and the public, regardless of politics or party, have been ready to stick with the United Nations through thick and thin.

The Organization has reached a point where the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council need to be enlarged to take account of the great growth of the Organization in recent years.

The proposed amendments offer responsible and equitable plans for meeting this problem.

Because the United Nations will continue to be deeply needed by nations which seek peace -- by all nations which seek to raise the levels of human welfare -- by all nations which seek to cooperate in putting the achievements of modern technology to work for all mankind -- it is in the national interest of the United States to ratify these steps toward making more effective the principal Councils of the Organization.

I therefore request the consent of the Senate to ratification by the United States of these amendments to the Charter of the United Nations.

U.S.-CANADA AUTO TARIFFS

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's March 31 letter to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House on the U.S.-Canada agreement on automotive duties:

Dear Mr. President: (Dear Mr. Speaker:)

On January 16, Prime Minister Pearson of Canada and I signed an important agreement looking toward freer trade in automotive products between our two North American countries. This Agreement resolves the serious difference which existed between Canada and the United States over our automotive trade. More significantly, it marks a long step forward in United States commercial relations with her greatest trading partner. It testifies to the goodwill and confidence between us.

The automotive producers of the United States and Canada make up a single great North American industry. The same kind of cars, using the same parts, are produced on both sides of the border, in many cases in factories only a few miles apart. Over 90% of the automobiles sold in Canada are assembled by firms owned in part or in whole by United States companies. The men and women who work in the plants on both sides of the border are members of the same international union.

Tariffs and other restrictions involving Canadian-United States trade in automotive products have been the cause of significant inefficiency in this great industry. Canadian plants produce a great variety of cars, essentially identical with those made in far larger numbers in the United States. Because the Canadian market is relatively small, production runs have been short, and costs and prices have been high. High costs and prices, in turn -- supported by the tariff and other restrictions -- have contributed to keeping the market small.

Historically, Canada's share in North American automotive production has lagged far behind her share in automotive purchases. In 1963, in an attempt to increase its share of the North American market, the Canadian Government put into effect a plan, involving the remission of tariffs, which was designed to stimulate automotive exports. A number of United States manufacturers, believing they would be injured by the plan, called upon this Government to impose countervailing duties. In all probability, such action would have invited retaliation. We were faced by the prospect of a wasteful contest of stroke and counter-stroke, harmful to both Canada and the United States, and helpful to neither. Our broader good relations with our Canadian friends would have suffered serious strain.

To avoid such a dismal outcome, our two governments bent every effort to find a rational solution to the problems of a divided industry. The Automotive Products Agreement that the Prime Minister and I signed in January is the result of our joint labors.

The agreement will benefit both countries. We will have avoided a serious commercial conflict. Canada will have achieved her objective of increasing her automotive production. United States manufacturers will be able to plan their production to make most efficient use of their plants, whether in Canada or the United States. They will save the price of the tariff, and, over the longer run, we will benefit from the faster growth in the Canadian market which lower prices will make possible.

The Agreement has already brought results. The Canadian Government revoked its controversial plan and, on January 18, reduced all relevant duties to zero. I am informed that the Canadian Parliament will be asked to give its approval in the near future.

We recognize, of course, that full integration of the North American automobile industry cannot be brought about all at once. To allow time for adjustment, the Canadian sector of the industry -- less than 1/20 the size of ours -- will operate initially under special arrangements. The Agreement itself will be subject to comprehensive review no later than January 1, 1968. We should then be in a position to judge what further steps are necessary.

In signing the Agreement, I pledged myself to ask the Congress to authorize the President to remove all United States duties on Canadian automobiles and parts for original equipment. I am today sending to the Congress draft legislation which would give the President that authority. The proposed legislation would also authorize the President to make similar automotive agreements with other countries, and to make agreements leading to mutually beneficial reduction of duties on replacement parts.

I repeat: In my judgment, the Agreement will benefit both Canada and the United States, and the automotive industry and automotive workers in both countries. However, we recognize that adjustments in an industry of such size could result in temporary dislocation for particular firms and their workers.

To provide appropriate relief, the bill I propose will make applicable the adjustment assistance of Title III of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. The tariff change contemplated in the automotive agreement, is, however, a special case. Tariffs will be cut to zero, all at one time. Furthermore, dislocation, if it should occur, may well be due as much to the decrease in exports of certain products as to an increase in imports. Therefore, this Bill calls for special procedures for obtaining adjustment assistance. These special procedures will be limited in application to this Agreement and to a transition period of three years. If a similar agreement is made with another country, or if we should make agreements affecting replacement parts, appropriate adjustment assistance legislation will be recommended to the Congress.

* * * * *

The Agreement and this Bill are designed to lead to a more efficient organization of the North American automotive industry. It is based on mutual trust and will result in mutual benefit -- benefit to producers, to labor, and to consumers on both sides of the border.

Canada has acted. It is our turn. In order that we may act, I ask the Congress to approve promptly this legislation.

Sincerely,
LYNDON B. JOHNSON

President Requests Broad Changes In Silver Coinage System

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's June 3 message to Congress on silver coins:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

From the early days of our independence the United States has used a system of coinage fully equal in quantity and in quality to all the tasks imposed upon it by the Nation's commerce.

We are today using one of the few existing silver coinages in the world. Our coins, in fact, are little changed from those first established by the Mint Act of 1792. For 173 years, we have maintained a system of abundant coins that with the exception of pennies and nickels is nearly pure silver.

The long tradition of our silver coinage is one of the many marks of the extraordinary stability of our political and economic system.

Continuity, however, is not the only characteristic of a great nation's coinage. We should not hesitate to change our coinage to meet new and growing needs. I am, therefore, proposing certain changes in our coinage system -- changes dictated by need -- which will help Americans to carry out their daily transactions in the most efficient way possible.

There has been for some years a world-wide shortage of silver. The United States is not exempt from that shortage -- and we will not be exempt as it worsens. Silver is becoming too scarce for continued large scale use in coins. To maintain unchanged our high silver coinage in the face of this stark reality would only invite a chronic and growing scarcity of coins.

We expect to use more than 300 million troy ounces -- over 10 thousand tons -- of silver for our coinage this year. That is far more than total new production of silver expected in the entire Free World this year. Although we have a large stock of silver on hand we cannot continue indefinitely to make coins of a high silver content -- in the required quantity -- in the face of such an imbalance in the production of silver and the demand for it.

We must take steps to maintain an adequate supply of coins, or face chaos in the myriad transactions of our daily life -- from using pay telephones to parking in a metered zone to providing our children with money for lunch at school.

The legislation I am sending to the Congress with this Message will ensure a stable and dignified coinage, fully adequate in quantity and in its specially designed technical characteristics to the needs of our Twentieth Century life. It can be maintained indefinitely, however much the demand for coin may grow.

Much as we all would prefer to retain the silver coins now in use, there is no practical alternative to a new coinage based on materials in adequate supply.

THE NEW COINAGE

I propose no change in either the penny or the nickel.

The new dime and the quarter -- while remaining the same size and design as the present dime and quarter -- will be composite coins. They will have faces of the same copper-nickel alloy used in our present five cent piece, bonded to a core of pure copper. The new dime and quarter will, therefore, outwardly resemble the nickel, except in size and design, but with the further distinction that their copper core will give them a copper edge.

This type of coin was selected because, alone among practical alternatives, it can be used together with our existing silver coins in the millions of coin-operated devices that Americans now depend upon heavily for many kinds of food and other goods.

THE HALF DOLLAR

Our new half dollar will be nearly indistinguishable in appearance from the present half dollar.

It will continue to be made of silver and copper, but the silver content will be reduced from 90 percent to 40 percent. It will be faced with an alloy of 80 percent silver and 20 percent copper, bonded to a core of 21 percent silver and 79 percent copper. The new half dollar will continue to be minted with the image of President Kennedy. Its size will be unchanged.

THE SILVER DOLLAR

No change in this famous old coin, or plans for additional production, are proposed at this time. It is possible that implementation of the new coinage legislation that I am proposing, greatly reducing the requirement for silver in our subsidiary coinage, will actually make feasible the minting of additional silver dollars in the future. Certainly, without this change in the silver content of the subsidiary coinage, further minting of the silver dollar would be forever foreclosed.

It is our intention that the new coinage circulate side-by-side with our existing coinage. We plan to continue the minting of our current silver coins while the new coinage is brought into quantity production.

The new coins will be placed in circulation some time in 1966.

In terms of the present pattern of coin usage, adoption of the new coinage will permit a saving of some 90 percent of the silver we are now putting into coins annually.

I want to make it absolutely clear that these changes in our coinage will have no effect on the purchasing power of our coins. The new ones will be exchanged at full face value for the paper currency of the United States. They will be accepted by the Treasury and by the Federal Reserve Banks for any of the financial obligations of the United States. The legislation I am proposing expressly recognizes the new coins as legal tender.

It is of primary importance, of course, that our new coins be specifically designed to serve our modern, technological society. In the early days of the Republic, silver coins served well because the value of a coin could only be measured by the value of the precious metal contained in it. For many decades now the value of a particular coin has depended not on the value of the metal in it, but on the face value of the coin. Today's coinage must primarily be utilitarian. The new coinage will meet this requirement fully, while dispensing with the idea that it contain precious metal.

It is, above all, practical. It has been specifically designed to function, without causing delays or disruptions of service, in coin-operated merchandising machines.

Furthermore, it is composed of materials low enough in value and readily enough available to insure that we can have as many coins as we need.

The legislation I am proposing also contains these additional recommendations:

OTHER AUTHORITY REQUESTED

First -- As a useful precautionary measure, I request standby authority to institute controls over the melting and export of coins to assist the protection of our existing and our new silver coinage.

Second -- I request authority to purchase domestically mined silver at not less than $1.25 per ounce.

Third -- I am asking for authority to reactivate minting operations temporarily at the San Francisco Assay Office.

Fourth -- As a safeguard for assured availability of the new coinage, I am asking for new contracting authority for the procurement of materials and facilities related to it.

Fifth -- I propose the establishment of a Joint Commission on the Coinage, composed of certain members of the Congress, the Public and the Executive Branch of the Government, to report to me later the progress made in the installation of the new coinage and to review any new technological developments and to suggest any further modifications which may be needed.

WHY THE SILVER CONTENT OF THE COINAGE MUST BE REDUCED AT THIS SESSION

These recommendations for revision of our silver coinage rest upon extensive study of the silver situation, and of alternatives to our present coinage, by both governmental and private specialists. The Treasury Department's comprehensive report, known as the Treasury Staff Silver and Coinage Study, is being released today as background to my recommendations. Its principal finding was that the supply of silver in the Free World has become progressively incompatible with the maintenance of silver in all our subsidiary coins.

On the average, in the five years from 1949 through 1953, new silver production in the Free World amounted to about 175 million troy ounces per year, while consumption amounted to more than 235 million ounces. There was an average deficit in those five post-war years of more than 60 million ounces of silver per year.

In the latest complete five years, 1960 through 1964, Free World consumption of silver has averaged 410 million ounces annually, but new production has averaged a little less than 210 million ounces a year. The result has been an average annual deficit of about 200 million ounces. That is three times the average annual deficit in the five years from 1949 through 1953.

If no silver at all had been used for coinage there would have been a deficit in new production in Free World silver during the last five years averaging over 40 million troy ounces, or some 1,370 tons, a year.

The gap between the production of silver and silver consumption is continuing to increase. In 1964 the silver production deficit swelled to over 300 million ounces -- half again the 1963 figure. And in 1964, the use of silver in coinage, and the use of silver for the arts and industry of the Free World were each -- taken separately -- greater than new production.

There is no dependable or likely prospect that new, economically workable sources of silver may be found that could appreciably narrow the gap between silver supply and demand. The optimistic outlook is for an increase in production of about 20 percent over the next four years. This would be of little help. Further, because silver is produced chiefly as a by-product of the mining of copper, lead and zinc, even a very large increase in the price of silver would not stimulate silver production sufficiently to change the outlook.

Short of controls that are undesirable in a peacetime free society, there is no way to diminish the bounding growth of private demand for silver for use in jewelry, silverware, photographic film and industrial processes. The one part of the demand for silver that can be reduced is governmental demand for use in coinage.

Most Free World countries no longer use silver in their coins. A few -- as we now propose -- continue to make limited use of it. It is true that United States coinage does not currently depend upon new silver production, because for many years we have supplied silver for our coinage out of large Treasury stocks, which still amount to 1 billion troy ounces.

But -- and this is the crux of the matter -- at the present pace, this stock cannot last even as much as three years. We would then be shorn of our ability to maintain the coinage, and, if there were no alternative to our present silver coinage, the nation would be faced with a chronic coin shortage. That is why definitive action is necessary at this session of the Congress.

PROTECTION OF THE COINAGE

It is necessary for the United States government to have large stocks of silver in addition to the quantity needed for coinage.

We need these stocks because our silver coins in circulation must be protected from hoarding or destruction. Protection of the silver coinage will continue to be a necessity since we plan for it to continue to circulate alongside the new coins. Our silver coins are protected by the fact that the government stands ready to sell silver bullion from its stocks at $1.29 a troy ounce. This keeps the price of silver, as a commodity, from rising above the face value of our coins. This, in turn, makes hoarding or melting of the silver coinage unprofitable.

It is as additional protection for the existing coinage that I am requesting stand-by authority to institute controls over the melting, treating or export of United States coins.

It may be asked why we seek stand-by control authority since we retain a large stock of silver with which to protect our silver coins through operations in the silver market.

The answer is clear. Given the magnitudes by which demand for silver is outrunning new production, we must consider the possibility, however unlikely, that the silver stock we possess could itself require the support and protection that would be afforded by authority to forbid melting and export of our coins.

We believe our present stocks of silver to be adequate, once the large present drains from coinage are greatly reduced, to meet any foreseeable requirements for an indefinite period. However, prompt action on a new coinage will help us protect the silver coinage by freeing our silver reserves for redemption of silver certificates at $1.29 per ounce. Thus, we can assure that no incentive will be created for hoarding our present coins in anticipation of a higher price for their silver content.

There is the opposite, although in all likelihood short-run, possibility that a fall in the price of silver might result from the enactment of this legislation largely removing silver from our subsidiary coin. It is for the purpose of protecting silver producers from a precipitate drop in the price of silver resulting from the action of the government that I am requesting authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase any newly mined domestic silver offered to him, at the price of $1.25 per troy ounce.

THE SAN FRANCISCO ASSAY OFFICE

Coinage operations at the San Francisco Mint were ended in 1955. Legislation converting the Mint to the San Francisco Assay Office was passed in 1962. As part of our efforts to overcome the coin shortage of the past year, coin blanks have been cut and annealed at the San Francisco Assay Office. Present law forbids full minting there. However, we will temporarily need the facilities of this plant to move into large quantity production of the new coinage and to continue production of existing coins until enough new small money is made to make certain we have adequate supplies. Consequently, I am asking for authority to reactivate minting operations at San Francisco on a temporary basis.

A new, fully modern mint is to be built in Philadelphia. However, it cannot be completed and in operation before late 1967. It is our expectation that when the new Philadelphia Mint's capacity is added to that of the Denver Mint, our coinage requirements can be met efficiently and economically. Consequently, no more than temporary authority to mint coins in San Francisco is recommended in the draft legislation I am sending to you.

WHY COMPOSITE COINS ARE RECOMMENDED

We have no choice but to eliminate silver, for the most part, from our subsidiary coinage. The question was: What would be the best alternative? After very thorough consideration of all aspects of this highly complex problem, we have settled upon the two types of composite, or clad, coins I have already described. These are 10-cent and 25-cent pieces with cupro-nickel alloy faces bonded to a solid copper core, and a new half dollar with outer and inner layers of differing silver-copper alloys.

This type of coin was found to be necessary if the new coinage is to be compatible with the existing silver coinage in all the 12 million coin-operated devices in use in the United States.

The convenience of using coins in automatic merchandising and service devices is a fact that, like the coins in our pockets and in our store tills, we take for granted. But if our coinage were suddenly to be such that it would not work in coin-operated devices, the public would be subjected to very great inconvenience and serious losses would occur to business with harmful effects upon employment.

The automatic merchandising industry is a large and growing part of our national economy. Last year, $3-1/2 billion worth of consumer items were sold through 3-1/2 million of these machines. On more than 30 billion separate occasions a consumer made a purchase by putting a coin in a machine. In growing numbers, factories, hospitals and other places now depend upon automatic vending for the service of goods. A million and a half people now rely upon coin controlled vending for at least one meal a day. The use of coin-operated devices is expanding rapidly, not only in merchandising vending, but also in a number of other services.

Six million of our coin-operated devices, including nearly all vending machines, have selectors set to reject coins or imitations of coins that do not have the electrical properties of our existing silver money. Highly selective rejectors are a necessity in these machines if they are to be a low-cost source of food and other goods and services. Otherwise, fraudulent use would soon make them costly.

The sensors in these machines are set to accept or reject coins on the basis of the electrical properties of our traditional coins, which have a high proportion of silver. To be compatible in operation with our existing coinage, therefore, our new coins must duplicate the electrical properties of a coin that is 90 percent silver. No single acceptable metal or alloy does so. The composite coins, made of layers of differing metals and alloys, that I am asking the Congress to approve, are coins made to order to duplicate the electrical properties of coins with a high silver content. They are the only practical alternatives we have discovered to our present coinage.

Selectors exist that can handle coins with the widely varying electrical properties of, say, nearly pure silver and nearly pure nickel. But that is not enough. When the selectors are set to accept coins with greatly differing electrical properties, the selectivity of the mechanism declines and they will accept wrong coins and imitations. Unless the coins in use have very similar electrical properties, the coin-operated machines become subject to a high degree of fraudulent use. This would be costly to all concerned.

The future may bring selectors of a different kind able to accept coins of widely varying electrical properties while at the same time rejecting imitations and wrong coins. They are not available now. When and if they become available, our new coinage will work in them. On the other hand, if we now chose an incompatible coinage, there would be delays and interruptions lasting a year to three years in the services of these machines. This would impose heavy inconveniences upon the public and would cause business and employment losses in a large and growing industry.

In view of these considerations of public interest, we have concluded that our new coinage must without fail be able to carry out the technical merchandising functions of a modern coinage, working alongside our existing silver coinage. The new coins that I am recommending to you do this, and do it well, because they were specifically designed for the task.

The new half dollar was designed with the strong desire in mind of many Americans to retain some silver in our every-day coinage. We believe that by eliminating silver from use in the dime and the quarter, we will have enough silver to carry out market operations in protection of our existing silver coinage -- and to make a half dollar of 40 percent silver content. It is clear and unmistakable that we would not have enough silver to extend this to the dime and quarter: they are heavily used, indispensable coins that we must have at all times in large quantity. We are convinced that we can include a 40 percent silver half dollar in the new coinage, but we cannot safely go beyond that. As a precaution, we intend to concentrate at first on getting out large quantities of the new quarter and dime before we embark upon quantity production of the new half dollar.

THE JOINT COMMISSION ON THE COINAGE

We believe the recommendations being made for a new coinage are sound and durable and in the best public interest. However, the installation of a new coinage is a matter so intimately affecting the life of every citizen, and so delicately related to the nation's commerce, that it is impossible to be certain in advance that all problems have been foreseen, even by such a long and arduous process of research as has gone into the selection of the proposed new coins.

Consequently, I am including among my recommendations the proposal for a Joint Commission on the Coinage. It will be composed of the four officers of the Executive Branch most directly concerned with matters affected by the coinage -- the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, the Director of the Budget Bureau and the Director of the Mint; of four members representing the public interest, to be appointed by the President; of the Chairmen and ranking members of the Banking and Currency committees of the House and the Senate; of one member each from the two houses of the Congress, to be appointed by the Vice President and the Speaker of the House. The Commission will be appointed soon after the new coinage is issued. It will study such matters as new technological developments, the supply of various metals, and the future of the silver dollar. It will report as to the time and circumstances in which the government should cease to maintain the price of silver. It will be directed to advise the President, the Congress and the Secretary of the Treasury on the results of its studies.

THE COINAGE -- CURRENT AND PROSPECTIVE

I am pleased to report to the Congress substantial progress toward overcoming the coin shortage the Nation has been experiencing. Greatly increased minting has eliminated the shortage of pennies and of nickels. We are still somewhat on the short side of the demand for dimes and quarters, but this deficit is rapidly being overtaken. A severe shortage of the half dollar continues, due to the popularity of the new 50 cent pieces bearing the image of President Kennedy.

I want to emphasize that we will continue to make the existing coins while the new ones come into full production, and that we contemplate side-by-side circulation of the old and new coins for the indefinite future. There is no reason for hoarding the silver coinage we now use, because there is no reason for it to disappear.

We are gearing up for maximum production of the new coins as soon as they are authorized by the Congress. Supply of the materials for them is assured. Both copper and nickel are economical and available in North America. Their usage in coins will not add enough to over-all employment of these metals to create supply or price problems.

In the first year after new coins are authorized, we expect to make 3-1/2 billion pieces of the new subsidiary coins. That is a billion and a half more pieces than will be made of the corresponding silver coins in the current fiscal year.

In the second year after authorization of the new coinage, we expect to be able to double the first year's output of the new coins, reaching a production total of 7 billion pieces.

We expect in this way to avoid any new coin shortage in the transition to production of the new coins, and within a period of less than three years to reach a point at which we could if necessary meet total coinage needs out of production of the new coins.

I am satisfied that, taking into account all of the various factors involved in this complex problem, the recommendations that I am making to you are sound and right. Your early and favorable action upon the proposed legislation will make it possible to produce and issue to the public a coinage that will be acceptable, provide the maximum convenience, and serve all the purposes -- financial and technical -- of modern commerce. In considering this problem the needs of the economy and the convenience of the public have been placed ahead of all other considerations. They are the factors that have resulted in my recommendations to the Congress. I urge their approval at the earliest possible date.

Immigration Policy

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's Jan. 13 message to Congress on Immigration:

A change is needed in our laws dealing with immigration. Four Presidents have called attention to serious defects in this legislation. Action is long overdue.

I am therefore submitting, at the outset of this Congress, a bill designed to correct the deficiencies. I urge that it be accorded priority consideration.

The principal reform called for is the elimination of the national origins quota system. That system is incompatible with our basic American tradition.

Over the years the ancestors of all of us -- some 42 million human beings -- have migrated to these shores. The fundamental, longtime American attitude has been to ask not where a person comes from but what are his personal qualities. On this basis men and women migrated from every quarter of the globe. By their hard work and their enormously varied talents they hewed a great nation out of a wilderness. By their dedication to liberty and equality, they created a society reflecting man's most cherished ideals.

Long ago the poet Walt Whitman spoke our pride: "These States are the amplest poem." We are not merely a nation but a "Nation of Nations."

Violation of this tradition by the national origins quota system does incalculable harm. The procedures imply that men and women from some countries are, just because of where they come from, more desirable citizens than others. We have no right to disparage the ancestors of millions of our fellow Americans in this way. Relationships with a number of countries, and hence the success of our foreign policy, is needlessly impeded by this proposition.

The quota system has other grave defects. Too often it arbitrarily denies us immigrants who have outstanding and sorely needed talents and skills. I do not believe this is either good government or good sense.

Thousands of our citizens are needlessly separated from their parents or other close relatives.

To replace the quota system, the proposed bill relies on a technique of preferential admissions based upon the advantage to our nation of the skills of the immigrant, and the existence of a close family relationship between the immigrant and people who are already citizens or permanent residents of the United States. Within this system of preferences, and within the numerical and other limitations prescribed by law, the issuance of visas to prospective immigrants would be based on the order of their application.

First preference under the bill would be given to those with the kind of skills or attainments which make the admission especially advantageous to our society. Other preferences would favor close relatives of citizens and permanent residents, and thus serve to promote the reuniting of families -- long a primary goal of American immigration policy. Parents of United States citizens could obtain admission without waiting for a quota number.

Transition to the new system would be gradual, over a five-year period. Thus the possibility of abrupt changes in the pattern of immigration from any nation is eliminated. In addition, the bill would provide that as a general rule no country could be allocated more than ten percent of the quota numbers available in any one year.

In order to insure that the new system would not impose undue hardship on any of our close allies by suddenly curtailing their emigration, the bill authorizes the President, after consultation with an Immigration Board established by the legislation, to utilize up to thirty percent of the quota numbers available in any year for the purpose of restoring cuts made by the new system in the quotas established by existing law.

Similar authority, permitting the reservation of up to ten percent of the numbers available in any year, would enable us to meet the needs of refugees fleeing from catastrophe or oppression.

In addition the bill would:

(1) permit numbers not used by any country to be made available to countries where they are needed,
(2) eliminate the discriminatory "Asia-Pacific Triangle" provisions of the existing law,
(3) eliminate discrimination against newly independent countries of the Western Hemisphere by providing nonquota status for natives of Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago,
(4) afford nonquota status to parents of citizens, and fourth preference to parents of resident aliens,
(5) eliminate the requirement that skilled first preference immigrants needed in our economy must actually find an employer here before they can come to the United States,
(6) afford a preference to workers with lesser skills who can fill specific needs in short supply,
(7) eliminate technical restrictions that have hampered the effective use of the existing Fair-Share Refugee Law, and,
(8) authorize the Secretary of State to require re-registration of quota immigrant visa applicants and to regulate the time of payment of visa fees.

This bill would not alter in any way the many limitations in existing law which prevent an influx of undesirables and safeguard our people against excessive or unregulated immigration. Nothing in the legislation relieves any immigrant of the necessity of satisfying all of the security requirements we now have, or the requirements designed to exclude persons likely to become public charges. No immigrants admitted under this bill could contribute to unemployment in the United States.

The total number of immigrants would not be substantially changed. Under this bill, authorized quota immigration, which now amounts to 158,361 per year, would be increased by less than 7,000.

I urge the Congress to return the United States to an immigration policy which both serves the national interest and continues our traditional ideals. No move could more effectively reaffirm our fundamental belief that a man is to be judged -- and judged exclusively -- on his worth as a human being.

WATER DESALINATION

Following is the complete text of a March 29 letter from President Johnson to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Dear Mr. President: (Dear Mr. Speaker:)

Past generations of Americans have been blessed with an abundance of sparkling, clean water. But in recent years we have become careless in our stewardship of this vital resource -- polluting, wasting, and carelessly exploiting it.

Water shortages -- real as well as prospective -- already plague some regions of our land. Other areas and communities will soon be threatened. Yet, we must have an abundance of fresh water if we are to continue to grow and prosper.

Action to conserve what nature has so generously provided has often been inadequate and too late. We are determined not to make this mistake again. I have already pledged full support for cleaning up our rivers -- and keeping them clean. We will continue to foster conservation by planning for the wisest possible use of all existing water supplies and by curbing and eliminating wasteful and uneconomic uses of water.

But these steps are not enough. New sources of supply at competitive costs are also required if we are to stay abreast of the ever-mounting demand for water. The seas around us offer an inexhaustible reservoir to help meet this need in coastal areas while vast quantities of brackish water are available to supplement the supplies of many inland areas. We must spare no effort in learning how to desalt these waters economically.

For the past 12 years the United States has been engaged in a program of research and development which has brought desalting technology to a point where it shows promise of economic application in the future. To stimulate the translation of this promise into reality, I requested the Department of the Interior last July to develop, in close collaboration with the Atomic Energy Commission, a proposed program which would significantly advance large-scale desalting technology.

The resulting report entitled "Program for Advancing Desalting Technology," was completed promptly and released to the public on October 26, 1964. It recommended -- and I am transmitting with this letter draft legislation to accomplish -- expansion, extension, and acceleration of the salt water conversion research and development activities now being conducted by the Department of the Interior under authority of the Anderson-Aspinall Act of 1961.

This legislative proposal would increase by $200 million the $75 million appropriation authorization provided in the 1961 Act and extend through 1972 the time during which the authorized funds would be available to support this important program. Enactment of this legislation is vital if the Department of the Interior is to mount and lead the substantial sustained effort necessary to achieve truly economical desalting of sea and brackish waters.

In the meantime, I have already transmitted to the Congress a request for a supplemental appropriation of $3.9 million in 1965 to enable the Department, through a reorganized Office of Saline Water, to accelerate its research and development activities along the general lines outlined in the report mentioned above. Desalting activities will receive continuing emphasis in 1966. My budgetary recommendations to Congress for the coming fiscal year amount to $29 million for the Office of Saline Water, more than double the amount appropriated for 1965.

By pressing ahead with a vigorous program of economic desalting to meet our ever-growing needs for water, we will at the same time provide the technology which can be shared with other nations. This technology could prove to be the key that will unlock the door to economic growth for many of these nations.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the power for good, the palliative effect on age-old animosities and problems, that would result from providing an abundance of water in lands which, for countless generations, have known only shortage. To stimulate cooperation in the field with such great potential for the good of mankind, the United States will convoke a symposium of interested nations in October 1965 to exchange information on desalting technology.

SOUTHEAST ASIA DEVELOPMENT

Following is the complete text of President Johnson's June 1 message to Congress requesting funds for Southeast Asia development:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The American people want their government to be no only strong but compassionate. They know that a society is secure only where social justice is secure for all its citizens. When there is turmoil anywhere in our own country, our instinct is to inquire if there is injustice. That instinct is sound. And these principles of compassion and justice do not stop at the water's edge. We do not have one policy for our own people and another for our friends abroad.

A vast revolution is sweeping the southern half of this globe. We do not intend that the Communists shall become the beneficiaries of this revolt against injustice and privation. We intend to lead vigorously in that struggle. We will continue to back that intention with practical and concrete help.

In Southeast Asia today, we are offering our hand and our abundance to those who seek to build a brighter future. The effort to create more progressive societies cannot wait for an ideal moment. It cannot wait until peace has been finally secured. We must move ahead now.

I know of no more urgent task ahead. It requires more of us, more of other prosperous nations, and more of the people of Southeast Asia.

For our part, I propose that we expand our own economic assistance to the people of South Viet Nam, Thailand and Laos.

I propose we start now to make available our share of the money needed to harness the resources of the entire Southeast Asia region for the benefit of all its people. This must be an international venture. That is why I have asked Mr. Eugene Black to consult with the United Nations Secretary General and the leaders of the poor and advanced nations. Our role will be vital, but we hope that all other industrialized nations, including the Soviet Union, will participate.

To support our own effort, I ask the Congress to authorize and appropriate for FY 1966 an additional $89 million for the Agency for International Development for expanded programs of economic and social development in Southeast Asia.

This money will serve many purposes:

1. Approximately $19 million will provide the first installment of our contribution to the accelerated development of the Mekong River Basin. This is an important part of the general program of regional development which I outlined at Johns Hopkins University on April 7. This money will enable us to meet a request for half the cost of building the Nam Ngum Dam, which the international Mekong Committee has marked "top priority" if the Mekong River is to be put to work for the people of the region. This will be the first Mekong power project to serve two countries, promising power to small industry and lights for thousands of homes in Northeast Thailand and Laos. The funds will provide also for

-- power lines across the Mekong linking Laos and Thailand;
-- extensive studies of further hydroelectric, irrigation and flood control projects on the Mekong main stream and its tributaries;
-- expansion of distribution lines in Laos.

2. Five million dollars will be used to support electrification cooperatives near three provincial towns -- Long Xuyen, Dalat and Nha Thang -- in South Viet Nam. Co-ops, which have been so important to the lives of our rural people, will bring the benefits of low priced electricity to more than 200,000 Vietnamese. We hope this pattern can be duplicated in towns and villages throughout the region. I will ask that we provide further support if the pattern meets the success we believe possible.

3. Seven million dollars will help provide improved medical and surgical services, especially in the more remote areas of Viet Nam, Laos and Thailand. South Viet Nam is tragically short of doctors; some 200 civilian physicians must care for a population of 15,000,000. In Laos the system of AID-supported village clinics and rural hospitals now reaches more than a million people. But that is not enough. We propose to extend the program in Laos, assist the Thailand Government to expand its public health services to thousands of rural villages, and to organize additional medical and surgical teams for sick and injured civilians in South Viet Nam.

Better health is the first fruit of modern science. For the people of these countries it has far too long been an empty promise. I hope that when peace comes our medical assistance can be expanded and made available to the sick and wounded of the area without regard to political commitment.

4. Approximately $6 million will be used to train people for the construction of roads, dams and other small-scale village projects in Thailand and Laos. In many parts of Asia the chance of the villager for markets, education and access to public services depends on his getting a road. A nearby water well dramatically lightens the burdens of the farmer's wife. With these tools and skills local people can build their own schools and clinics -- blessings only dreamed of before.

5. Approximately $45 million will be used to finance increasing imports of iron and steel, cement, chemicals and pesticides, drugs, trucks and other essential goods necessary for a growing civilian economy. This money will allow factories not only to continue but, through investment, to expand production of both capital and consumer goods. It will provide materials for urgently needed low-cost housing. And it will maintain production incentives and avoid inflation. It is not easy for a small country, with a low income, to fight a war on its own soil and at the same time persist in the business of nation-building. The additional import support which I propose will help Viet Nam to persevere in this difficult task.

6. An additional $7 million will supplement the present program of agricultural development and support additional government services in all three countries, and will help in the planning of further industrial expansion in the secure areas of Viet Nam.

Much of the additional assistance I request is for Viet Nam. This is not a poor and unfavored land. There is water and rich soil and ample natural resources. The people are patient, hard-working, the custodians of a proud and ancient civilization. They have been oppressed not by nature but by man. The failures of man can be redeemed. That is the purpose of the aid for which I now ask additional authorization.

We are defending the right of the people of South Viet Nam to decide their own destiny. Where this right is attacked by force, we have no alternative but to reply with strength. But military action is not a final solution in this area; it is only a partial means to a much larger goal. Freedom and progress will be possible in Viet Nam only as the people are assured that history is on their side -- that it will give them a chance to make a living in peace, to educate their children, to escape the ravages of disease and, above all, to be free of the oppressors who for so long have fed on their labors.

Our effort on behalf of the people of Southeast Asia should unite, not divide, the people of that region. Our policy is not to spread conflict but to heal conflict.

I ask the Congress, as part of our continuing affirmation of America's faith in the cause of man, to respond promptly and fully to this request.

PRESIDENT SEEKS TEACHER CORPS FOR SLUM SCHOOLS

Text of July 17 letter from President Johnson to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Dear Mr. President: (Dear Mr. Speaker:)

As I announced in my remarks before the National Education Association on July 2, I am proposing legislation to bring the best of our Nation's talent to its schools. This legislation -- The Teaching Professions Act of 1965 -- will

- create a National Teacher Corps to serve in city slums and areas of rural poverty,
- establish a program of fellowships to prepare students for teaching careers in elementary and secondary education and to help experienced teachers enhance their qualifications,
- aid institutions of higher education to provide better programs for educating teachers.

The National Teacher Corps draws on that spirit of dedication of Americans which has been demonstrated time and again in peace and war, by young and old, at home and abroad. It will provide a challenge and an opportunity for teachers with a sense of mission -- those best suited to the momentous tasks this Nation faces in improving education.

The National Teacher Corps can help improve the quality of teaching where quality is most needed and most often in short supply -- in city slums and in areas of rural poverty. It will enroll experienced teachers, and, to work with them, students who intend to make teaching a career. They will teach in local schools at the request of local communities and will serve on the same terms as local teachers. They will be local, not Federal, employees.

The fellowships are essential if teaching is to attract a higher proportion of our ablest young people, and if the best teaching is to prevail in the classroom. Students preparing for teaching in these days should have superior graduate training. Teaching is a difficult job at best; the more preparation for it, the better.

The desire of classroom teachers to replenish their skills and knowledge is not only to be applauded but aided. As revolutionary changes take place in all subjects and at all levels of learning, there is a limit to the sacrifice we can ask of our teachers in their efforts to renew their knowledge.

Finally, I propose a program of grants to help institutions of higher education offer first-rate programs to would-be teachers as well as to experienced teachers. This measure, coupled with the fellowship program and the National Teacher Corps, complete a program which is entitled to be called the Teaching Professions Act of 1965.

The Teaching Professions Act of 1965 is a composite of hard thinking about educational problems in the Congress, in the Executive Branch, and in the teaching profession. It owes much to the proposals of Senators Gaylord Nelson and Edward Kennedy for a national teacher corps; to Senators Wayne Morse and Clifford Case and Representatives Carl Perkins and John Brademas for a program of fellowships for teachers; and to Representative Patsy Mink for a program of Federal grants to teachers for sabbatical leaves.

This bill will deepen the meaning and substance of the already impressive work of the 88th and 89th Congresses in the field of education. I have concluded that it is of sufficient urgency to justify action by this session of the Congress. The problems which face us in education do not grow smaller as time goes by; neither should our determination to attack and solve those problems. I commend to you the Teaching Professions Act of 1965, and hope that you will give it speedy consideration.

Sincerely,
LYNDON B. JOHNSON

PRESIDENT JOHNSON VETOES SEVEN BILLS IN 1965

President Johnson in 1965 vetoed seven bills during the session, two major public bills and five private bills. There were no pocket vetoes. The 1965 vetoes brought the total number of bills vetoed by Mr. Johnson during his Presidency to 15. (For others, see 1963 Almanac p. 1020, 1964 Almanac p. 892.) Details of the 1965 vetoes:

Public Bills Vetoed

Of the two public bills vetoed, one concerned disaster relief to flood-damaged states in the Pacific Northwest (S 327) and the other authorized the annual military construction program (HR 8439). Both bills contained provisions which Mr. Johnson said violated the separation of powers between the Legislative and Executive Branches. The Democratic-controlled 89th Congress made no attempt to override the President's vetoes but, instead, passed almost identical legislation omitting the objectionable provisions.

A third bill, the omnibus rivers and harbors bill (S 2300), did not receive a Presidential veto although it contained a similar language provision requiring approval by legislative committees before funds could be appropriated for water resource development projects. (See story p. 751) On signing S 2300 Oct. 26, Mr. Johnson said: "Absolute legal consistency would require that I veto what is otherwise a sound bill because of this one objectionable provision." He pointed out, however, that unlike the two vetoed bills, S 2300 permitted, but did not require, the Executive Branch to use the procedure described in the provision. He said, "Therefore, I believe that by refusing to use the procedure, by noting my objections to it, and by seeking its repeal in the next session of Congress, it is possible to approve the remainder of the bill without yielding to encroachment."

S 327 -- To authorize emergency appropriations of up to $50 million in fiscal 1965 and $20 million in fiscal 1966 to provide assistance to California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and Idaho for the reconstruction of areas heavily damaged by floods in late 1964 and early 1965. (The amounts were in addition to a $30 million annual appropriations authorization contained in existing law for disaster relief. See story p. 676.)

The provision in S 327 which caused the veto authorized the President to undertake certain construction, but prevented the appropriation of money for any work which was not first approved by the House and Senate Public Works Committees. The President, in his June 5 veto message, said he "must oppose the tendency to use any device to involve Congressional committees in the administration of programs and the implementation of laws." Supporting the general purposes of the bill, which had cleared Congress May 20, the President said this provision of prior approval "infringes upon the responsibilities of the Executive Branch" and "violates the spirit of the division of powers between the Executive and Legislative Branches." The "device" requiring an executive official to obtain committee approval before taking an executive action, the President said, "is not only an undesirable and improper encroachment by the Congress... into the area of executive responsibilities -- it also leads to inefficient administration." After the veto a nearly identical bill, omitting the objectionable provision, was enacted as the Pacific Northwest Disaster Relief Act.

HR 8439 -- To authorize $1,780,062,000 in fiscal 1966 for construction at military installations in the United States and abroad, and for military family housing. The bill contained a provision which required that plans to close military installations be submitted to Congress between Jan. 1 and April 30 each year, and that no plan could be put into effect until 120 days after Congress was notified. In addition, it provided that if Congress adjourned prior to the expiration of the 120 days, the proposed closure must be delayed and the plan resubmitted during the next regular session of Congress.

In his veto message Aug. 21, Mr. Johnson said this provision was "repugnant to the Constitution," involving a "fundamental encroachment" on the separation of powers between the Legislative and Executive Branches. He said the provision could "seriously interfere with and adversely affect" the flexible and timely administration of the military services. A President, he said, "under his oath of office, must be concerned about the cumulative erosion of the executive power..." Mr. Johnson indicated he would accept a "reasonable reporting provision" that was "consistent with the legislative powers of Congress." A revised version of the provision for Congressional review was included in a subsequent bill (HR 10775 -- PL 89-188). This measure provided for a 30-day waiting period after full justification of plans to close military bases had been submitted to the House and Senate Armed Services Committees. (See story p. 697)

Private Bills Vetoed

HR 1867 -- To authorize payment of $1,000 to Daniel Walter Miles, Brockton, Mass., in settlement of his claim against the United States under the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946 for compensation for property losses in the Philippines during World War II. In his veto message to the House, Mr. Johnson said the claim had been considered and rejected by the Philippine War Damage Commission and that to set aside the Commission's judgment would entitle other claimants to seek similar relief through Congress. The bill was introduced by Rep. James A. Burke (D Mass.). It passed the House March 16 (H Rept 119) and the Senate June 1 (S Rept 260). HR 1867 was vetoed by the President June 14.

HR 2166 -- To confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to judge a claim of Staiman Brothers-Simon Wrecking Co. for losses allegedly sustained by them in connection with a $301,000 contract with the General Services Administration for purchase of buried cast iron pipe in a surplus military water system. The bill also waived all defenses of the United States based on provisions in the purchase contract explicitly denying warranty as to quantity, size and character, and barring claims based on errors or omissions in the descriptions of the pipe. The wrecking company alleged that the weight of the pipe they removed fell almost 40 percent short of the estimated weights on which they had bid. The General Accounting Office had denied the administratively submitted claim.

In vetoing the bill June 26, President Johnson said: "The conditions of sale of the property were clear and specific" and the rule of caveat emptor ("buyer beware") applied as in similar contract cases. In addition, the President objected to the bill's restriction of the Court of Claims' authority to decide the case on its merits by waiving the Government's defenses based on contract provisions "to which the claimants agreed with their eyes wide open."

HR 2166 was introduced by Rep. Herman T. Schneebeli (R Pa.). It was passed by the House April 6 (H Rept 121) and by the Senate June 10 (S Rept 302) and was vetoed June 26.

HR 3329 -- To incorporate the Youth Councils on Civic Affairs and to grant them a federal charter. The Councils, which originated in Jacksonville, Fla., provided a youth jury system under which young people who had been in trouble explained their actions to a panel of other young people. The panel served in an advisory capacity to the judge of the Jacksonville municipal court. The system was instituted in a number of other cities and in March 1963 the Youth Councils on Civic Affairs were incorporated in Florida under state law.

In vetoing the bill, Mr. Johnson said that his concern was not with the "worthwhile purposes" of the bill, but with "the question of whether we were granting federal charters to private organizations on a case-by-case basis without the benefit of clearly established standards and criteria as to eligibility." Mr. Johnson added that "federal charters should be granted, if at all, only on a selective basis and ...should meet some national interest standard." Rep. Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.) introduced HR 3329 Jan. 21. It passed the House (H Rept 645) July 22 and the Senate, amended (S Rept 550), Aug. 12. The bill was cleared Aug. 26 and vetoed by Mr. Johnson Sept. 10.

HR 5902 -- To allow Cecil Graham to file a late income tax refund claim, notwithstanding the statute of limitations. Graham claimed refund for taxes erroneously paid by him on disability payments during the period 1947-1955. A court decision had held in 1952 that disability payments were tax exempt and put taxpayers on notice that they should file claims for refund. However, Graham failed to file in time. In vetoing the bill, the President said: "It is common knowledge that the tax law frequently changes. In our self-administered tax system, Mr. Graham, like all other taxpayers, had a responsibility for keeping informed... Approval of this bill would discriminate unfairly against other taxpayers similarly situated and set an unfortunate precedent." HR 5902 was introduced March 5 by Rep. John Jarman (D Okla.). It was passed by the House June 15 (H Rept 408) and by the Senate Sept. 17 (S Rept 720). President Johnson vetoed it Oct. 4.

HR 1384 -- To waive the statute of limitations to permit Theodore Zissu to seek recovery of his interest in the property of a Romanian corporation which was taken over by the United States in 1942 under the Trading With the Enemy Act. After being advised in 1943 by the Office of Alien Property that he was an ineligible claimant, Zissu ceased to press his claim further, administratively or through the courts. Subsequent court decisions gave proponents of HR 1384 reason to think they could get a favorable ruling on behalf of Zissu.

In vetoing the bill, President Johnson said that to permit a revival of a lapsed claim on the basis of subsequent judicial rulings "counters a fundamental tenet of our legal system...(that) seeks finality of judgment and stability in the law by a refusal of the courts to reopen settled cases because new judicial decisions may be more favorable to disappointed litigants." HR 1384 was introduced by Rep. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.). It was passed by the House April 6 (H Rept 83) and by the Senate Sept. 30 (S Rept 696). It was vetoed by President Johnson Oct. 20.

ACTION ON NOMINATIONS

1965 PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

In 1965, President Johnson filled five Cabinet posts and made his first Supreme Court appointment. He also nominated twice as many persons to top federal jobs as he had in the previous year.

Secretary of Commerce. John T. Connor, confirmed Jan. 15 as Secretary of Commerce, was President Johnson's first Cabinet appointment. Connor replaced Luther H. Hodges, 67, who had announced Dec. 16, 1964, that he planned to retire because of age. Connor, former president of Merck & Co., a pharmaceutical manufacturer, was vice president and a founder of the National Independent Committee for Johnson-Humphrey, an election committee of businessmen who supported the Democratic ticket.

Attorney General. Nicholas deBelleville Katzenbach, who had been Acting Attorney General since Robert F. Kennedy resigned as Attorney General Sept. 3, 1964, to seek a Senate seat from New York, was confirmed Feb. 10 as Attorney General of the United States. Confirmed on the same day was Assistant Attorney General Ramsey Clark, son of Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, to replace Katzenbach as Deputy Attorney General.

Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate March 25 confirmed the nomination of Henry H. Fowler to succeed retiring Douglas Dillon as Secretary of the Treasury. Fowler, 56, served as Under Secretary of the Treasury from 1961-64. In this capacity, he was the principal Administration lobbyist for its $11 billion tax reduction bill. (1964 Almanac p. 518)

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. The President's fourth Cabinet appointment, John W. Gardner, was confirmed Aug. 11 as Secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Gardner, a Republican, was president of the Carnegie Corp. and of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. He was chairman of the 1965 White House Conference on Education and the Task Force on Education established by President Johnson in 1964. (See story p. 274)

Gardner succeeded Anthony J. Celebrezze, HEW Secretary since 1962, whom the President nominated for a judgeship on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. The Senate Aug. 19 confirmed the nomination.

Postmaster General. The Senate Sept. 1 confirmed the nomination of White House aide Lawrence F. O'Brien to replace John A. Gronouski as Postmaster General. Gronouski, named to the Cabinet in 1963 by President Kennedy, was confirmed Sept. 10 as U.S. Ambassador to Poland. O'Brien served as special assistant to the President for Congressional relations and personnel and was given credit for much of the success in Congress of the Kennedy and Johnson legislative programs. He was the major strategist in Mr. Kennedy's fight for the Democratic Presidential nomination and election in 1960, and was National Director of Organization for the 1964 Johnson-Humphrey campaign.

A new Cabinet post, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), was created Sept. 9, 1965 (PL 89-174), and Robert C. Weaver, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, was appointed Secretary in January 1966. (See story p. 382)

Supreme Court Appointment. The Senate Aug. 11 confirmed the nomination of Abe Fortas as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. Fortas, a long-time friend of President Johnson, became the President's first appointment to the Court. Fortas succeeded Arthur J. Goldberg, who resigned (See below). Fortas was a member of the law firm of Arnold, Fortas and Porter, and was Under Secretary of the Interior under President Roosevelt in 1942.

Fortas was confirmed by voice vote after Republican Senators Carl T. Curtis (Neb.), Strom Thurmond (S.C.) and John J. Williams (Del.) spoke against his nomination. Curtis charged that Fortas "put the United States last" in asking Washington newspaper editors to withhold news of White House aide Walter Jenkin's arrest on moral charges during the presidential campaign. (1964 Almanac p. 895)

United Nations. The Senate July 23 confirmed the nomination of Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations. Goldberg, formerly Secretary of Labor in the Kennedy Administration, had held his Supreme Court post since Sept. 25, 1962. He succeeded Adlai E. Stevenson, who had served as UN Ambassador since 1961. Stevenson died July 14 in London.

Other Notable Appointments

Additional 1965 appointments of major significance, excluding the President's personal staff, were:

- The elevation of Charles L. Schultze, former assistant director of the Budget Bureau, to director. (The post does not require Senate confirmation.) Schultze succeeded Kermit Gordon, who resigned June 1 to become vice president of the Brookings Institution.
- The confirmation Aug. 11 of Thurgood Marshall as Solicitor General of the U.S., the first Negro named to this post.
- The confirmation April 22 of Vice Admiral William F. Raborn Jr. (ret.) to succeed retiring John A. McCone as director of the Central Intelligence Agency.
- The appointment July 21 of Leonard Marks to head the United States Information Agency, succeeding Carl T. Rowan, and the appointment July 28 of John W. Chancellor, White House correspondent for the National Broadcasting Co., as director of the Voice of America.
- The appointment March 9 of W. Averell Harriman as U.S. Ambassador-at-large, and the reassignment July 28 of Henry Cabot Lodge as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Viet Nam.
- The appointment May 26 of Franklin Delano Roosevelt Jr., former Under Secretary of Commerce, as chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.
- The nomination of Roger W. Wilkins to head the Community Relations Service, which was established in the 1964 Civil Rights Act.
- The nomination of William H. Stewart, director of the National Heart Institute, to succeed Dr. Luther L. Terry as Surgeon General of the U.S. Public Health Service.

Judgeships. President Johnson July 26 nominated Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.) to be a federal judge for the Eastern and Western Districts of Arkansas. Harris, who served in Congress since 1940, was chairman of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee since 1956. He was confirmed Aug. 11. The Senate Oct. 21 also confirmed the nomination of Charles W. Halleck, son of Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), former Minority Leader, to a 10-year term as a judge on the Washington, D.C., Court of General Sessions. The Senate July 1 confirmed the nomination of U.S. District Judge Homer Thornberry to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. Thornberry is a former Member of the House of Representatives (D Texas 1949-1963).

Maritime Commission. An Administration-backed bill (HR 5988), authorizing five-year, instead of four-year terms for Federal Maritime Commissioners, was signed into law (PL 89-56) June 30. The bill also permitted a commissioner to continue in office until his successor had been confirmed by the Senate. The five-year terms "would avoid the possible concurrent loss of two experienced members of the Commission (and)...would ensure the availability of sufficient seasoned personnel at all times," said Chairman John Harllee before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. (Harllee's nomination for the longer, five-year term was confirmed July 16.)

FBI Director Confirmation. A bill (S 313), providing for Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation of future Directors of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and establishing a rate of compensation for that office at $30,000, passed the Senate May 24 by voice vote and was sent to the House where it remained at the end of the session. The bill was sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.).

White House Staff

In 1965 the last of President Kennedy's top aides left the White House staff, leaving President Johnson, in his second full year in office, surrounded almost entirely by his "own" men.

Major Kennedy aides who left were David F. Powers, Special Assistants Lawrence F. O'Brien, who became Postmaster General, P. Kenneth O'Donnell and Richard N. Goodwin. McGeorge Bundy, a special assistant since 1961, announced he would resign early in 1966 to become president of the Ford Foundation.

Top White House staff members in 1965 are listed below, in no particular order. The address after the individual's name and age indicates the state in which he claimed residence. (No Senate confirmation is required for these posts.)

Bill D. Moyers, 31, Marshall, Texas; Press Secretary; salary $30,000. Moyers, who came to the White House in late 1963 as special assistant for the legislative program, assumed the duties of Press Secretary on the resignation July 8 of George E. Reedy.

McGeorge Bundy, 46, Cambridge, Mass.; Special Assistant for National Security Affairs; salary $30,000. A former Harvard Univ. dean, Bundy joined the White House staff in 1961 and was a major foreign affairs adviser to both Presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

W. Marvin Watson, 41, Daingerfield, Texas; Special Assistant; salary $30,000. Watson, who moved to the White House Feb. 1, assumed the title of appointments secretary to handle the President's hour-to-hour schedule. A former Democratic state chairman of Texas, he is the White House contact with the Democratic National Committee.

E. Jake Jacobsen, 46, Austin, Texas; Legislative Counsel; salary $30,000. On the White House staff since April 15, Jacobsen inherited much of Lawrence O'Brien's duties, handling Congressional liaison activities.

Harry C. McPherson Jr., 36, Tyler, Texas; Special Assistant; salary $30,000. Joining the White House staff in August 1965, as assistant to Special Counsel Lee C. White, McPherson formerly was Assistant Secretary of State for Cultural Affairs. (On Feb. 11, 1966, Mr. Johnson appointed Mr. White to be chairman of the Federal Power Commission, and promoted McPherson to the post of Special Counsel.)

Lee C. White, 43, Omaha, Neb.; Special Counsel. White joined the White House legal staff in 1961 and succeeded Myer Feldman in this post when the latter resigned.

George E. Reedy, 47, Washington, D.C.; Special Assistant; salary $30,000. Press Secretary until July 8, Reedy left for health reasons and returned two months later to work on labor-management problems and other special assignments.

Jack J. Valenti, 43, Houston, Texas; Special Assistant; salary $30,000. Valenti joined the White House staff in November 1963. He schedules the President's major appearances, edits Presidential speeches and serves as White House contact for foreign diplomats and many outside groups.

Joseph A. Califano Jr., 35, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Special Assistant; salary $30,000. A former special assistant to the Secretary of Defense and Deputy Secretary of Defense, Califano joined the White House staff in August 1965. His prime responsibility is the development of the Administration's legislative program.

S. Douglass Cater, 42, Alexandria, Va.; Special Assistant on Education and International Affairs; salary $30,000. Cater, a writer and former correspondent for the Reporter magazine, joined the White House staff in early 1964. He also oversees affairs relating to health.

Disputed Nominations

Coleman Nomination. The Senate July 26 confirmed, by a 76-8 roll-call vote, President Johnson's nomination of former Mississippi Gov. James P. Coleman to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. The eight dissenters were Republicans Clifford P. Case (N.J.), John Sherman Cooper (Ky.) and Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.), and Democrats Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), Philip A. Hart (Mich.), Wayne Morse (Ore.), Gaylord Nelson (Wis.) and William Proxmire (Wis.). (For voting, see chart p. 1062) The Senate Judiciary Committee July 20 approved Coleman's nomination by a 13-2 vote, with Javits and Hart dissenting. A three-man subcommittee had approved the nomination July 13 following two days of hearings at which criticism from various civil rights groups focused on Coleman's past segregationist views.

Bagge Nomination. The Senate May 19 unanimously confirmed the nomination of Carl E. Bagge to fill a Republican vacancy created by the death of Commissioner Harold Woodward on the Federal Power Commission. Confirmation came after the Senate Commerce Committee May 18 approved, 15-1, Bagge's nomination. The sole dissenter was Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger (D Ore.), who questioned Bagge's role in a dispute over a plan for a racially integrated housing project in Deerfield, Ill. In testimony before the Committee Bagge stated that he did not support a move to block the housing project.

McKee Appointment. President Johnson April 27 announced the nomination of Gen. William F. McKee (USAF ret.) to the post of Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, replacing Najeeb Halaby, who planned to resign. Since the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 provided that the Administrator "shall be a civilian at the time of his appointment," the President urged enactment of legislation to authorize McKee's appointment without the retired general resigning from the military.

The House June 3 passed by a 228-137 roll-call vote HR 7777, which would permit the appointment. (For voting, see chart p. 966) During debate on HR 7777, proponents said that McKee was an able administrator with considerable knowledge of supersonic technology. Opponents did not question McKee's ability, but they objected to the appointment of a military man to a post required by law to be filled by a civilian.

The bill contained a provision stating that McKee's appointment was not to be taken as Congressional approval for future appointment of military men to the FAA post.

The Senate June 17 passed HR 7777 by a 46-20 roll-call vote, clearing the bill for the President's signature. (For voting, see chart p. 1051) Senate debate on HR 7777 was similar to that in the House. Opponents in the Senate included Vance Hartke (D Ind.), James B. Pearson (R Kan.) and Senate Majority Whip Russell B. Long (D La.). Long and Hartke argued that passage of HR 7777 was "tantamount" to Senate confirmation of McKee. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee, said McKee was selected for his abilities necessary for research on a supersonic transport. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), chairman of the Commerce Committee, said that an exception to the civilian-administrator requirement was "justified" in this case.

The Senate June 30 by voice vote confirmed McKee's nomination.

Bress Confirmation. The Senate Oct. 22 confirmed by a roll-call vote of 49-14 the President's nomination of David G. Bress as U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia. (For voting, see chart p. 1080) Bress was nominated to succeed David C. Acheson, who Aug. 10 was appointed Special Assistant to the Secretary of Treasury (for enforcement). Two Democrats, Frank J. Lausche (Ohio) and Gale W. McGee (Wyo.), opposed the nomination after it became known that Bress, a District lawyer, was retained as counsel for Serv-U Corp., owned by former Secretary to the Senate Majority Robert G. (Bobby) Baker. Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach, who recommended the nomination, was quoted as having said that Bress was retained only briefly by Serv-U and scarcely knew Baker.

In debate Oct. 22, John J. Williams (R Del.) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) argued alone against nomination.

Morrissey Judgeship Nomination. President Johnson Sept. 26 announced his intention to nominate Boston Municipal Court Judge Francis X. Morrissey to be a federal district judge in Massachusetts. The Senate Judiciary Committee, after a brief controversy about Morrissey's residence in Georgia in the 1930s, approved the nomination by a vote of 6-3. Voting for approval were: Chairman Eastland (D Miss.), Burdick (D N.D.), Dodd (D Conn.), Hart (D Mich.), Kennedy (D Mass.) and Smathers (D Fla.). Voting against were: Dirksen (R Ill.), Ervin (D N.C.) and Scott (R Pa.). Not voting were: McClellan (D Ark.), Long (D Mo.), Bayh (D Ind.), Tydings (D Md.), Hruska (R Neb.), Fong (R Hawaii) and Javits (R N.Y.). Javits, who was absent when the vote was taken, Oct. 15 said he would have voted against approval.

Morrissey's nomination touched off a storm of controversy. Morrissey, a longtime friend of former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and of President John F. Kennedy, was opposed by the American Bar Association (ABA) in 1961 when he was previously considered for the judgeship. In testimony before the Committee Oct. 12, House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.), in a rare appearance at a Senate hearing, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.), the nominee's principal backer, led eight witnesses in praising Morrissey as a man of character and experience. Objections to Morrissey centered on alleged inconsistencies in his testimony about his study of law in Massachusetts and his residency in Georgia. Senate Minority Leader Dirksen, who led the fight against Morrissey, contended that the main objection to the nominee was that he was not qualified to sit on the federal bench. An ABA spokesman, Bernard G. Segal, said to the Committee Oct. 12: "From the standpoint of legal training, legal experience and legal ability, we have not had any case where these factors were so lacking -- and I say that to my deep regret."

Throughout the controversy, President Johnson was recuperating from a gall bladder operation in Bethesda Naval Hospital, but the Administration assisted in the drive for Morrissey's support as Vice President Humphrey Oct. 20 reportedly began helping Kennedy round up votes. However, the Senate Oct. 21, at Kennedy's request, by unanimous consent recommitted Morrissey's nomination to the Judiciary Committee. Morrissey Nov. 5 requested that President Johnson withdraw his nomination and the President complied.

Judgeships as Patronage

Federal judgeships are highly desirable patronage jobs for several reasons. They are lifetime appointments and pay $33,000 for circuit court and $30,000 for district court judgeships annually.

There is no mandatory retirement age, but judges may retire at age 65 after 15 years or at 70 after 10 years on the bench. A judge who retires after 10 years on the bench receives full salary for his lifetime.

The prestige of a federal judgeship is high and appointment to the judiciary is considered by most lawyers, who constitute a large proportion of active politicians, to be the apex of a legal career.

The following list gives the number of confirmed federal circuit and district court judges appointed by President Johnson, through Oct. 23, and by his four immediate predecessors:

	Democrats	Republicans
Roosevelt	188	6
Truman	116	9
Eisenhower	9	165
Kennedy	111*	11
Johnson	43	2

One New York Liberal also was appointed.*

President Johnson's Major Appointments of 1965

Listed below are the 174 persons named to major federal posts by President Johnson and confirmed by the Senate in 1965. Information is given in the following order: name of office; salary; appointee; residence; occupation before appointment; date and place of birth; party affiliation (if known); and date of Senate confirmation. Ambassadorial confirmations are listed only if the appointment was of more than routine interest. (For list of 1964 confirmations, see 1964 Almanac p. 897)

PRESSURE GROUPS HAPPY WITH 1965 LEGISLATION

Congress' legislative record in 1965 produced a mood of unusual satisfaction among labor, liberal and welfare organizations, according to Congressional Quarterly surveys.

With huge Democratic majorities, strong leadership from President Johnson and strong lobbying efforts from the labor, liberal and welfare groups, Congress in 1965 enacted a large number of bills for which these groups had been working for a generation or more.

Heading the list were the Medicare provisions of the omnibus Social Security bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10), both of which had been major Congressional issues since early in the Truman Administration (1945-53). Other long-standing liberal goals that were finally achieved in 1965 included repeal of the national origins quota system for immigration (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236), enactment of a strong federal law to protect Negro voting rights (S 1564 - -- PL 89-110) and numerous important education, welfare and health measures.

Even the failure of Congress to enact the four "bread and butter" labor bills most strongly sought by the unions -- "right to work" repeal (HR 77), minimum wage improvements (HR 10518, others), unemployment compensation reform (HR 8282) and common-site picketing (HR 10027) -- did not diminish the conviction that 1965 had brought a remarkable series of legislative victories for liberal causes. Although the unions deeply resented the failure of the four key labor bills, the AFL-CIO nevertheless characterized 1965 as "the most productive Congressional session ever held."

Surprisingly, in view of their more conservative orientation, many business organizations also were happy with the 1965 session. Their satisfaction was due largely to enactment of the excise tax reduction bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44), which they strongly supported, and to the blocking of the "bread and butter" labor measures (particularly "right to work" repeal), all four of which they strongly opposed. These five measures, many business spokesmen said, were the ones that would most directly affect their day-to-day conduct of business operations and were therefore of the greatest urgency for them. Consequently, the "favorable outcome" on these bills outweighed disappointment with passage of liberal legislation having less immediate effects on business.

MOST HEAVILY LOBBIED BILLS

According to the CQ surveys, the most heavily lobbied bills of 1965 were:

The 1965 legislative goals of some of the major pressure groups are described below. For stories on the bills mentioned by the various organizations, see page references to major stories listed above, and page references to other stories in Table of Contents and Index of this volume. In the discussion below, bills which were enacted into law in 1965 are identified by both the bill number and public law number. Bills for which no public law numbers are given were not enacted.

Business

American Bankers Assn. (Represents about 13,000 banking institutions and 4,000 branch banks.) Enactment of the bank merger bill (S 1698) was the Association's major aim. (It eventually passed in 1966.) The Association also successfully supported a bill (HR 3818 -- PL 89-3) eliminating a requirement that each Federal Reserve Bank maintain gold certificate reserves valued at 25 percent of the deposits of commercial banks that it holds; a bill (S 1309 -- PL 89-145) dealing with the drawing of bank checks by Government agencies; and inclusion within the Higher Education Act of 1965 (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329) of a student loan provision based on Association suggestions.

Other measures supported but not enacted in 1965 were: S 1558, dealing with loans to officers of banks belonging to the Federal Reserve System; S 2704 authorizing banks to establish collective investment funds; and HR 7539, authorizing banks to underwrite state and local revenue bonds.

The Association said that in 1966, it would support the above three bills, and would oppose the "truth in lending" bill (S 2275), the bill to create a federal mutual savings bank system (HR 11508), and any proposals to realign banking supervisory functions.

American Pharmaceutical Assn. (Represents 30,000 individual pharmacists and 15,000 student pharmacists.) Backed HR 2 (PL 89-74), to establish special controls over depressant and stimulant drugs. Said another major success was the inclusion of pharmacy students in the scholarship program of the Health Professions Educational Assistance Amendments of 1965 (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290). Efforts to obtain career incentives for pharmacists in the military service failed.

American Retail Federation. (Represents 75 national and state retail associations.) Said an excise tax reduction bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44) was finally achieved after "20 years of pounding on it." Was pleased by the failure of Congress to pass the "right to work" repeal (HR 77), minimum wage (HR 10518) and unemployment compensation (HR 8282) measures. Also successfully opposed the proposed "Design Protection" Act (HR 450, S 1237) and the "truth in lending" measure (S 2275).

American Textile Manufacturers Institute. (Represents 80-90 percent of the cotton, silk, and synthetic fibers textile industry.) The primary aim of the group during the 1965 session, enactment of "one-price" cotton provisions, was achieved in the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321).

American Trucking Assns. (Represents 50 state trucking associations and 13 trucker conferences.) Was successful in its "greatest concern" of 1965 -- to defeat highway and truck-use tax increases proposed by President Johnson in his May 17 excise tax message (the increases were not approved by Congress in 1965). Supported bills to help stop illegal for-hire trucking (HR 5401 -- PL 89-170) and to strengthen federal controls over depressants and stimulants (HR 2 -- PL 89-74). Was an "interested observer" of bills for research on high-speed ground transportation (S 1588 -- PL 89-220) and air pollution control (S 306 -- PL 89-272) and of Senate hearings and bills on highway safety (HR 8371, S 1643). ATA said its major 1966 efforts probably would be in opposition to new proposals to raise truck taxes because of a deficit in the Highway Trust Fund.

Associated General Contractors. (Represents about 7,800 contract construction firms.) Fared "pretty well" in 1965 because final action on most of the major "harmful stuff" was forestalled or blocked, namely, the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77), the common-site picketing bill (HR 10027), the minimum wage bill (HR 10518) and the Administration's double-overtime proposals. Also opposed the "industry fund" bill (HR 1153) that passed the House but not the Senate in 1965. "Generally" supported the highway beautification bill (S 2084 -- PL 89-285), and said elimination of an Administration provision that would have allowed transfer of secondary road funds to beautification purposes was a major AGC victory and had removed much of the opposition to the bill. Supported the federal disaster relief bill (S 1861) which passed the Senate but not the House in 1965; strongly backed expansion of the disaster relief program to include localities on a cost-sharing basis.

American Waterways Operators. (Represents all major regulated and unregulated companies engaged in shallow-draft water carrier transportation on inland waterways.) "Violently opposed" bills (HR 156, 723, 7491) to enhance navigation safety by requiring inspection, licensing and certificating of officers on certain towing vessels. Said the industry's good safety record made the bills unnecessary. (None of the bills passed.) Opposed transfer of the water project construction functions of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to the Interior Department, as had been proposed in one provision of S 2435, a bill to redesignate the Interior Department as the Department of Natural Resources and to transfer certain agencies to and from such Department. (S 2435 received no action.) Said, "We will fight to the bitter end" against President Johnson's recommendation (which was not enacted in 1965), for a tax of 2 cents per gallon on fuel used on inland waterways.

Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. (Represents 3,735 local and state chambers of commerce, trade and professional organizations.) Strongly favored and worked for the excise tax cut bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44). Aside from that, was "more pleased by what Congress didn't do than by what it did," being particularly gratified that Congress had failed to give final approval to the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77), the commonsite picketing bill (HR 10027), the minimum wage bill (HR 10518) and the unemployment compensation bill (HR 8282). Unsuccessfully opposed the bill creating a Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174). Worked for the Dirksen amendment on legislative reapportionment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103), which failed to pass in 1965.

Committee of American Steamship Lines. (Represents 14 Government-subsidized shippers.) Would not discuss details of its legislative activities, but Congressional hearings revealed that the group testified in favor of the following bills in 1965, of which only the first three received final action: HR 4346 (PL 89-127), to continue existing subsidy rates for construction and reconstruction of U.S. ships; HR 4526 (PL 89-89), to continue the availability of war-risk insurance for shipping when commercial insurance is unavailable; S 2118 (PL 89-346), relating to ship mortgage bonds; HR 10109, to impose various safety and other conditions and limitations on the operations of foreign-flag cruise ships (U.S.-flag lines have become increasingly concerned about the use of foreign-flag vessels in the cruise trade); and S 2069, to continue the vessel exchange program for another five years. In supporting S 2069, CASL said it favored legislation "to stop underevaluation by the Government of our ships upon being traded in," and to overturn "the Maritime Administration requirement that excessive repair be accomplished on ships before trade-in."

Committee for Study of Revenue Bond Financing. (Represents about 500 municipal securities dealers.) Opposed a measure (HR 7539) to allow national banks to underwrite and deal in securities issued by state and local governments. Said its testimony was instrumental in convincing the House Banking and Currency Committee not to report the bill.

Edison Electric Institute. (Represents 183 "investor-owned" electric companies.) Supported a bill (S 218), which was not finally enacted, to exempt from federal regulation all electric utilities operating primarily in a single state and most wholesale power sales to local utilities. Opposed proposals by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Assn. for new supplementary financing for rural electric cooperative associations.

National Assn. of Insurance Agents. (Represents 36,650 insurance agencies with 160,000 independent property insurance agents.) Strongly opposed an initial provision of the Social Security-Medicare bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) that permitted receipt of disability insurance benefits by persons whose disabilities were not established as permanent, and regarded the final compromise version of this provision as an improvement over more liberal earlier version. Opposed "overlapping" of benefits received under the Social Security-Medicare bill and benefits received as workmen's compensation, and supported an amendment to prevent such "doubling up." Was "disturbed" about proposals (which were not enacted) to allow federal "all-risk" crop insurance. "As a matter of principle," opposed provisions in the hurricane-relief bill (HR 11539 -- PL 89-339) to authorize study of a possible federal flood and earthquake insurance program

National Assn. of Life Underwriters. (Represents 95,000 life insurance agents.) "Took a licking" on the Social Security-Medicare bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97). Particularly disliked the provisions permitting the financing of the Medicare program in part from general revenues, and raising the Social Security taxable wage base from $4,800 to $6,600. Also opposed the bill providing group life insurance for servicemen (S 2127 -- PL 89-214), as there was "no particular need for a new layer of protection."

National Assn. of Manufacturers. (Represents 15,000 member companies.) Major 1965 success was enactment of the excise tax reduction bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44). Said the organization was gratified that Congress had not completed action on the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77), which was described as particularly important to smaller firms, or the minimum wage and double-overtime bills (HR 10518, HR 8259). Said the double-overtime provisions were a major concern of large manufacturers. The NAM said it would oppose these bills again in 1966, would work for modification of the unemployment insurance bill (HR 8282) and defeat of the "truth in packaging" bill (S 985). Bills of lesser importance but still of interest to the NAM in 1965 were the Patent Fees Act (HR 4185 -- PL 89-83) and Water Quality Act (S 4 -- PL 89-234), which the NAM described as "reasonable" measures tolerably close to the NAM position.

National Assn. of Real Estate Boards. (Represents 1,514 local real estate boards and 81,705 individual members.) Viewed establishment of the new Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174) as a major defeat. But claimed several successes in action on the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117): amendment "for the better" of the Association-opposed rent supplement program and later denial of funds for the program; inclusion of an Association-backed special FHA mortgage program for veterans; and the watering-down of Association-opposed provisions on new towns and FHA activities in connection with new towns.

National Canners Assn. (Represents 600 canning companies, marketing up to 85 percent of the total volume of canned goods.) Opposed the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77) and a provision in the minimum wage bill (HR 10518) to eliminate a seasonal overtime exemption for canners. Neither bill was finally enacted in 1965. Viewed the end of the Mexican labor ("bracero") program as hurting the industry. Supported an amendment to the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321) to transfer the determination as to the need for foreign migrant farm labor from the Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of Agriculture. The amendment was defeated.

National Federation of Independent Business. (Represents 212,000 small businesses and professional persons.) Strongly opposed the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77), the minimum wage increase bill (HR 10518), and a rumored Administration plan (never formally proposed) to place the Small Business Administration in the Commerce Department. None of the above three proposals was enacted into law in 1965. In matters of particular interest to small businesses, supported the following measures, none of which received final action in 1965: HR 318, "correcting excise tax levies on tires sold in company-owned stores"; HR 5840 and S 1201, to provide increased compensation to small businesses forced to relocate by the Federal Government; the "truth in packaging" bill (S 985); and bills to reintroduce "dual distribution" controls over company-owned stores (HR 1578, S 1842), to provide minimum tire safety standards (S 2669) and to repeal Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act and reenact it as part of the Clayton Act (S 995).

National Forest Products Assn. (Represents 15 regional and species associations in all parts of U.S.; formerly called National Lumber Manufacturers Assn.) Opposed the following measures, none of which was finally enacted into law in 1965: "right to work" repeal (HR 77), minimum wage increases (HR 10518), common-site picketing (HR 10027), unemployment insurance expansion (HR 8282) and a Presidential proposal to increase user taxes on tires. The Association said its biggest success of the year was passage of a bill (HR 10198 -- PL 89-303) to restore the requirement that common carriers by water file shipping rates for hardwood lumbers with the Federal Maritime Commission. Also considered a victory were inclusion of research and related provisions benefiting timber in the Appalachia bill (S 3 -- PL 89-4).

National Restaurant Assn. (Represents 110,000 food service industry businesses.) Repeal of cabaret and club admission taxes by the excise tax bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44) was a major success. Another goal was partially achieved when the Social Security bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) required that only employees, not employers, pay Social Security withholding taxes on tips. Was successful in warding off legislation opposed by the Association when Congress failed to complete action in 1965 on "right to work" repeal (HR 77), unemployment insurance revisions (HR 8282) or minimum wage changes that might have ended the restaurant industry's exemption from the minimum wage law. Opposed provisions of the highway beautification bill (S 2084 -- PL 89-285) that might have barred "adequate" restaurant signs along highways; considered concessions on this point by the bill's supporters "pretty reasonable."

National Small Business Assn. (Represents 35,000 independent small businesses.) Supported the following measures that were enacted: excise tax cuts (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44), an increased ceiling for Small Business Administration revolving fund loans (HR 7847 -- PL 89-78), increase in SBA aid to disaster victims (S 1796 -- PL 89-59), and the State Technical Services Act (S 949 -- PL 89-182). Said Congress' failure to complete action on the following bills also was an NSBA victory: "truth in packaging" and "truth in lending" (S 985, S 2275), "right to work" repeal (HR 77), common-site picketing (HR 10027), minimum wage (HR 10518). Unsuccessfully opposed the Medicare provisions of Social Security (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97). Supported provisions (such as included in HR 11450, a tax bill on which there was no action) to eliminate the reserve ratio test for machinery depreciation.

Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn. (Represents 140 companies producing about 95 percent of U.S.-made prescription drugs.) Favored inclusion in the Medicare bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) of a provision to allow Government reimbursement for combination drugs used in hospitals for the treatment of Medicare patients, even when such drugs were not included in the drug directories and compendia specifically listed in the bill. (The PMA said these directories listed primarily single-ingredient drugs.) Won a partial victory when the conference report permitted reimbursement for combination drugs if the drug was approved for use in a participating hospital by the latter's pharmacy and drug therapeutics committee. Said the victory was only partial because only about one-third of the hospitals (mainly larger ones) had such committees. (Note: Although it did not issue a formal ruling on the matter, the Department of HEW subsequently indicated late in 1965 that it would also allow reimbursement for combination drugs if all their major ingredients were listed individually in the specified directories.) Strongly supported the loan section of the Health Professions Educational Assistance Act (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290) and the bill to control depressant and stimulant drugs (HR 2 -- PL 89-74). Supported the McClellan (D Ark.) patent policy bill (S 1809) and opposed the Long (D La.) patent policy bill (S 1899). Supported a bill to limit federal purchases of drugs manufactured abroad in violation of U.S. patents (S 1047). S 1809, S 1899 and S 1047 did not pass.

Transportation Assn. of America. (Represents a cross section of the transportation industry, including shippers, banks and insurance companies, and the six different types of carriers: air, highway, pipeline, rail, forwarders, and water.) Seven policies which TAA had been trying to implement for five years were included in HR 5401 (PL 89-170), a bill to combat illegal for-hire trucking. Five of the seven policies dealt with this subject. The sixth provided a means for shippers to sue motor vehicle common carriers for recovery of overcharges, and the seventh permitted the Interstate Commerce Commission to revoke the permit or certificate of any water carrier willfully failing to engage in any operation, after the ICC ordered them to provide service, authorized by any such certificate. One of TAA's "pet projects" was assistance to the Committee for Time Uniformity, an organization launched primarily by TAA, in its effort to pass a bill (S 1404) to make more uniform the observance of Daylight Saving Time in the United States. (Congress completed action on S 1404 in 1966.)

U.S. Savings and Loan League. (Represents 5,100 state and federally chartered savings and loan associations.) Succeeded in its primary objective -- to prevent inclusion of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in the new Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174). Another success was the inclusion of language in the Housing and Urban Development Act (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117) permitting savings and loans associations to make loans for college dormitories, fraternities, nurses' housing, and similar institutions.

Citizens

American Automobile Assn. (Represents 9.2 million motorists.) The "most important" legislation backed by AAA was the automobile excise tax cut in the excise tax bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44). Opposed unsuccessful amendments to the bill to use auto excise tax funds to aid in disposal of junked autos, and to make part of the excise tax cut contingent upon manufacturers installing specified safety devices in cars. In a change from past policy, the AAA in 1965 supported federal as well as state highway safety actions, for example, provisions stating that each state should have a federally approved safety program by Dec. 31, 1971, which were included in a bill apportioning highway funds (S J Res 81 -- PL 89-139); and bills (which were not ultimately enacted in 1965) to set federal safety standards for auto tires (S 2669), to construct a prototype safe car (S 2162), and to establish a National Highway Safety Center (S 2231). Also supported the highway beautification bill (S 2084 -- PL 89-285) but said it was "poorly drafted" and would need clarifying amendments; and establishment of various national parks and national seashores: Whiskeytown-Shasta-Trinity Recreational Area (HR 797 -- PL 89-336), Assateague National Seashore (S 20 -- PL 89-195), and others, including several upon which action was not completed in 1965, such as the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore (S 360) and Cape Lookout National Seashore (S 251). Supported HR 11685 (on which there was no action), which barred toll facilities on the Interstate Highway System unless there was a finding by the Secretary of Commerce that construction of toll facilities would be in the public interest.

American Civil Liberties Union. (Represents 80,000 individual members with 36 state affiliates.) A "major battle" was successfully waged against the Dirksen (R Ill.) amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103) on legislative reapportionment, which ultimately failed to pass in 1965. Considered passage of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10) an important breakthrough toward needed federal aid to schools, but was unhappy over the church-state problem created by the bill's provisions for aid to students in parochial schools and by its failure to provide specifically for judicial review of such aid. Also worked for the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110) and the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118, which did not ultimately pass in 1965.) Strongly supported the over-all immigration amendments (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236) -- though not the final Western Hemisphere limitation -- even though the ACLU did not succeed in getting into the bill a statute of limitations for deportable offenses. Backed the attempt to unseat the Mississippi House delegation; although this attempt failed, said the support for it in the House was "surprisingly good." Was happy that the Economic Opportunity Act amendments (HR 8283 -- PL 89-253) included provisions repealing the disclaimer affidavit requirements of the 1964 Job Corps sections and ending the requirement of mandatory security investigations for certain benefits under the Act. Opposed unsuccessfully the bill (HR 10306 -- PL 89-152) setting penalties for mutilation or destruction of draft cards. Opposed provisions of the D.C. Criminal Code bill (HR 5688) that modified the Supreme Court's Mallory rule. (HR 5688 did not receive final Congressional action in 1965.) Criticized Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) provisions disqualifying members of subversive organizations, but said these provisions were not discovered until after enactment.

American Coalition of Patriotic Societies. (Represents 100 affiliated civic, patriotic and fraternal groups with nearly 3 million members.) Was interested primarily in the immigration amendments (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236). Although the Coalition had long fought attempts to repeal the national origins quota system, it did not actively oppose repeal in 1965 but chose instead to support modification of the Administration immigration bill; strongly supported imposition of an over-all limit on Western Hemisphere immigration, and won a victory on this point in the final bill.

Americans for Democratic Action. (Represents 55,000 members.) Rated as its two greatest achievements its work to help pass the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110) and to defeat the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103). Also strongly backed the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10), the over-all immigration reform bill (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236) -- though not the final Western Hemisphere limitation -- the Medicare-Social Security bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97), and the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117) -- particularly the rent supplement provision. Said Congress' failure to appropriate funds to implement the rent supplement program was a great disappointment. Rated as other major disappointments Congress' failure to give final approval in 1965 to the following "crucial" ADA-backed bills: minimum wage (HR 10518), "right to work" repeal (HR 77), unemployment compensation amendments (HR 8282), and the Administration version of the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118).

American Public Power Assn. (Represents 1,200 local publicly owned electric systems.) Helped defeat bills (S 218, others) to exempt from Federal Power Commission jurisdiction electric power companies doing the major portion of their business within an individual state. Successfully supported authorization of the Dickey-Lincoln School federal hydroelectric power project and other electric projects in the rivers and harbors bill (S 2300 -- PL 89-298). Backed the Water Quality Act (S 4 -- PL 89-234).

Anti-Defamation League. (ADL is the "human relations section" of B'nai B'rith, a Jewish fraternal organization of 500,000 members.) The four major successes of the year were enactment of the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110), the immigration law repeal of the national origins quota system (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236) and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10), and defeat of the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103). Unlike several other Jewish organizations, which had called the dual enrollment provisions of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act an unconstitutional violation of church-state separation, the ADL did not oppose the dual enrollment provisions; however, it insisted that public and parochial school students not be separated by religion when attending classes under dual enrollment arrangements. (An ADL spokesman said administrative regulations had been adopted to this effect, but there was some question as to whether they would be adequate.) Also supported the Administration version of the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118, which did not ultimately pass in 1965), backed revision of the Senate cloture rule to make it easier to shut off debate (not enacted), backed the House rules changes that were adopted at the beginning of 1965, and endorsed a bill (HR 10065) to strengthen the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission (not enacted).

Citizens Committee on Natural Resources. (Consists of about three dozen individual leaders of large conservation organizations.) Top achievements were passage of the Water Quality Act (S 4 -- PL 89-234) which was called "one of the all-time great ones," and of the air pollution control bill (S 306 -- PL 89-272.) The cropland retirement program of the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321) was strongly supported because of the conservation and sports aspects. The Assateague National Seashore bill (S 20 -- PL 89-195) topped a long list of conservation measures for which the Committee successfully worked. A spokesman said numerous national park and memorial bills for which it had worked for 10 years were finally passed in 1965. The highway beautification bill (S 2084 -- PL 89-285) was a disappointment in that it failed to retain a provision requiring public works officials to consult with the Department of the Interior before a road was constructed through a park. Said the bill amounted to "planting posies" rather than preserving natural beauty. Also strongly supported the proposed Wild Rivers System (S 1446), which was not approved by Congress.

Friends Committee on National Legislation. (Consists of a "General Committee" of 190 Quakers appointed by various Quaker yearly meetings and groups; has mailing list of 18,000 persons.) Expended its major 1965 effort on opposing the war in Viet Nam and working for a peaceful settlement (of 830 interviews with Congressmen and federal officials during 1965, 600 were on the war); as part of this effort, opposed the special $700 million appropriation (H J Res 447 -- PL 89-18) for the war. Also backed the United Nations Charter Amendments Treaty ratified by the Senate June 3; favored ratification of the U.S.-Soviet Consular Treaty and was disappointed that it did not reach the Senate floor; and endorsed the economic aid portions of the foreign aid bill (HR 10871 -- PL 89-273) but, as in the past, opposed the military aid portions, including supporting assistance. Was disappointed that Congress authorized only $30 million over fiscal 1966-68 for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (HR 2998 -- PL 89-27), instead of the $55 million over fiscal 1966-69 requested by the Administration. In domestic affairs, gave "by far the most" effort to working for immigration reform (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236), and was pleased with the final bill except for the Western Hemisphere limitation it imposed.

Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. (A coordinating body for 104 Negro, civic, religious, labor and fraternal organizations favoring civil rights legislation.) Was successful in its "principal concern" -- to win passage of the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110). Opposed the Dirksen (R Ill.) amendment on legislative reapportionment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103) and was gratified that it was not passed. Supported House rules changes proposed by the Democratic Study Group, most of which were adopted at the beginning of 1965. Also supported the following bills, none of which received final Congressional approval in 1965: Senate version of D.C. home rule (S 1118); minimum wage increases (HR 10518); strengthening of the powers of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission (HR 10065).

League of Women Voters. (Consists of 145,000 women.) Worked for a wide range of legislation, chiefly through letter-writing campaigns and related activities by local chapters. In terms of organization effort, "biggest single item" receiving League support was the Senate version of the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118), upon which Congress did not complete action in 1965. Also worked for the Water Quality Act (S 4 -- PL 89-234) and Water Resources Planning Act (S 21 -- PL 89-80), both of which were enacted. Opposed cuts in foreign-aid appropriations (HR 10871 -- PL 89-273).

Liberty Lobby. (No membership figures available; has mailing list of 135,000 to 185,000.) Opposed the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110), but supported the Republican alternative (HR 7896). Opposed the over-all immigration reform bill (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236), but was successful in helping win amendments restricting immigration from the Western Hemisphere and requiring the Secretary of Labor to determine that Western Hemisphere applicants would not take jobs away from native Americans or adversely affect their wages and working conditions. Opposed the U.S.-Soviet Consular Treaty (which did not reach the Senate floor in 1965), opposed "right to work" repeal (HR 77, not finally enacted in 1965), and supported the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103). The latter was not ultimately enacted.

National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. (Represents about 600,000 persons, chiefly Negroes.) "Our main interest" was to win passage of the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110), a spokesman said, and "just from this standpoint alone, we would have to call it a successful session." Also supported the following bills none of which received final Congressional approval in 1965: HR 10065, to strengthen the powers of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; S 1118, the Senate version of the D.C. home rule bill; HR 10518, increasing the minimum wage; HR 8282, reforming the unemployment compensation system. Said that on legislation, the NAACP worked mainly through the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

National Assn. of Counties. (Represents 44 state associations of counties, over 600 individual counties and 1,500 county officials.) Supported various federal grants-in-aid to the states; the Public Works and Economic Development Act (S 1648 -- PL 89-136); bills to control air pollution (S 306 -- PL 89-272) and water pollution (S 4 -- PL 89-234); and the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117), with the exception of the rent supplements section on which no position was taken. Successfully opposed an Administration proposal to include in the Highway Beautification Act (S 2084 -- PL 89-285) a provision allowing transfer of secondary road funds to beautification purposes; the provision was eliminated. Expressed concern over the "bypass of local government" in the antipoverty program.

National Catholic Welfare Conference. (Is the "Secretariat" of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the U.S., presided over by an administrative board consisting of Roman Catholic bishops.) The "most important" bill of 1965 was the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10), which the Conference supported because it felt federal aid to education was necessary and because the bill permitted children attending Roman Catholic and other parochial schools -- as well as public schools -- to benefit from the federal aid. The Conference in the past had opposed federal-aid-to-education bills because they did not provide for aid to non-public schools or non-public-school children. While the 1965 bill did not provide basic direct federal aid to parochial schools, it permitted children attending such schools to benefit substantially from the federal aid in various ways (textbook aid, dual enrollment, supplementary education centers). The Conference also endorsed the Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329), Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97), the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110) and repeal of the national origins quota system in the immigration reform bill (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236). It backed passage of the unemployment insurance bill (HR 8282, which did not pass in 1965), but suggested revision to provide special treatment for nonprofit organizations. In testimony on the birth control bill (S 1676, which was not passed), said a Government role in birth control programs would pose a threat to civil liberties: "If the power and prestige of Government is placed behind programs aimed at providing birth control services to the poor, coercion necessarily results and violations of human privacy become inevitable."

National Council of Churches. (Represents 31 Protestant church groupings with total membership of 40 million persons.) Legislative program "came through fairly well" in 1965. Most important goal was achieved with passage of the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110). Supported the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10) while emphasizing that supplementary educational services and various shared services and shared-time programs provided by the bill should be administered by public agencies, and not by any religious or private groups whose children were benefiting from aid. Opposed all measures to detract from the one-man, one-vote principle, and was gratified that the Dirksen (R Ill.) amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103) did not pass. Was disappointed with the failure of "right to work" repeal (HR 77) to be enacted.

National Council of Senior Citizens. (Consists of 2,500 affiliated senior citizens and golden age clubs and affiliates with total membership of about 2.5 million.) Won a major victory with enactment of Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97); the Council was initially formed in 1961 for the purpose of backing the Medicare proposals and expended the vast bulk of its efforts on working for the Medicare plan. Was gratified by inclusion in the Social Security provisions (also in HR 6675) of a 7 percent raise in old-age, survivor and disability benefits. Backed the Older Americans Act (HR 3708 -- PL 89-73) and the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117) and strongly endorsed the latter's rent supplement provisions. Also backed the "truth in packaging" and "truth in lending" bills (S 985, S 2275) which were not enacted.

National Housing Conference. (Represents 3,500 individual architects, planners, redevelopers, labor leaders, and housing public officials.) Was "highly satisfied" with the progress of its 1965 program. Three major bills were passed substantially as desired: the measure creating a Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174), a proposal that the NHC said it first introduced in 1954; the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117) and the regional development bill (S 1648 -- PL 89-136). Said NHC proposals for public housing "came off very well".

National League of Cities. (Formerly American Municipal Assn.; represents 13,300 municipal governments.) Supported the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117); the establishment of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174); the Public Works and Economic Development Act (S 1648 -- PL 89-136); bills to control air pollution (S 306 -- PL 89-272) and water pollution (S 4 -- PL 89-234); the Law Enforcement Assistance Act (HR 8027 -- PL 89-197); a bill (HR 8283 -- PL 89-253) expanding the antipoverty program; and Title I of the Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329), authorizing community service programs.

National Reclamation Assn. (Has 4,000 members, about two-thirds of them representatives of irrigation organizations.) Supported the authorization of the Auburn-Folsom South (HR 485 -- PL 89-161) and Garrison (HR 237 -- PL 89-108) irrigation projects. Said the projects would have a "tremendous importance to the areas in which they are situated." Supported the river and harbor project authorization bill (S 2300 -- PL 89-298), the Water Resources Planning Act (S 21 -- PL 89-80), and a bill (S 24 -- PL 89-118) to extend the federal saline water conversion program.

National Rural Electric Cooperative Assn. (Represents about 1,000 rural electric cooperatives.) Supported a bill (S 1459), passed by the Senate but not the House in 1965, to exempt rural electric co-ops from jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. Opposed various proposals (S 218, others), which were not enacted, to exempt private power companies from FPC jurisdiction if their operations were primarily within one state. Supported the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117), particularly the titles expanding rural housing programs; the Public Works and Economic Development Act (S 1648 -- PL 89-136); the rural water system bill (S 1766 -- PL 89-240); the rivers and harbors authorization bill (S 2300 -- PL 89-298), particularly the provisions authorizing new federal water projects such as Dickey-Lincoln School, Lazer Creek and Lower Auchumpkee. Worked to obtain "adequate" rural electric cooperative loan authorizations of $475 million in the Rural Electrification Administration provisions of the agriculture funds bill (HR 8370 -- PL 89-316) and to prevent new restrictions from being placed on the loan policies of the REA. (The final bill authorized $365 million in rural electric loans.) Proposed a new system of supplementary financing for rural electric cooperative loans for 1966 consideration.

Unitarian Universalist Assn., Department of Social Responsibility. (The Assn., a religious denomination formed in 1961 by merger of the American Unitarian Assn. and the Universalist Church of America, had 172,659 members in 1965. The Department of Social Responsibility is its official social agency.) Gave highest priority in 1965 to enactment of the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110), and considered its passage a great success. Supported repeal of the national origins system in the immigration reform bill (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236). Favored the general idea of federal aid to public elementary and secondary schools but opposed the provisions of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10) which authorized textbook aid to church schools and dual enrollment (shared-time) programs; would nevertheless have supported the bill if it had contained a provision for judicial review of these and other provisions relating to aid to church schools, but since it did not, withheld endorsement of the bill. Considered Congress' failure to enact the Senate version of the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118) a great disappointment. Supported the following additional proposals which did not receive final Congressional approval in 1965: the "planning for peace" resolution (S Con Res 32); the population control bill (S 1676); and the provisions of the minimum wage bill (HR 10518) setting minimum wages for farm workers (took no position on other provisions of HR 10518). Supported the unsuccessful attempt to unseat the Mississippi delegation to the House early in 1965.

United World Federalists. (Represents 20,000 members.) Supported the United Nations Charter Amendments Treaty ratified by the Senate June 3, and the "planning for peace" resolution (S Con Res 32), on which there was no action in 1965. Backed the President's request for $55 million over four years in authorizations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency; Congress in the authorization bill (HR 2998 -- PL 89-27) provided only $30 million over three years. Also supported the U.S.-Soviet Consular Treaty which did not get Senate floor action in 1965. Said there was "not much progress" toward peaceful settlement of international issues in 1965.

U.S. Conference of Mayors. (Represents mayors of most U.S. cities of over 30,000 in population.) Supported the establishment of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174) and the 1965 omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117). Supported the bills to control air pollution (S 306 -- PL 89-272) and water pollution (S 4 -- PL 89-234). The air pollution bill included the Solid Waste Disposal Act which was especially strongly supported by the Conference. Also supported the Law Enforcement Assistance Act (HR 8027 -- PL 89-197), the Public Works and Economic Development Act (S 1648 -- PL 89-136), and two bills which did not receive final approval in 1965: the Senate-passed S 561, to provide more uniform administration of federal grant funds to the states and to establish a coordinated intergovernmental urban assistance policy; and S 1681, to provide for uniform, fair, and equitable treatment of persons, businesses, or farms displaced by federal or federally assisted programs.

Employee and Labor

AFL-CIO. (National headquarters of the over-all merged American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations represents approximately 13 million members of unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO.) Was deeply disappointed with Congress' failure to approve four major labor bills which had strong AFL-CIO endorsement, namely, the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77), which was the top priority measure among all the bills sought by the AFL-CIO in 1965; the minimum wage improvements bill (HR 10518, HR 8259, others), which was described as "the single most important measure in our war on poverty"; the unemployment insurance reform bill (HR 8282); and the common-site picketing bill (HR 10027).

Nevertheless, because of Congress' actions on various health, welfare, education and related measures supported by the AFL-CIO, considered 1965 "the most productive Congressional session ever held." The AFL-CIO executive council said the "highlights" of the session were enactment of: Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97), the Voting Rights Act (S 1564 -- PL 89-110), the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10), the Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329), "a stepped-up war on poverty" (HR 8283 -- PL 89-253), the omnibus housing bill (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117), the bill establishing a Department of Housing and Urban Development (HR 6927 -- PL 89-174), a "new regionally based public works program" (S 1648 -- PL 89-136), the highway beautification bill (S 2084 -- PL 89-285), "a sweeping new attack on health problems" (the regional medical bill, S 596 -- PL 89-239; the mental health staffing measure, HR 2985 -- PL 89-105; and others).

The AFL-CIO also supported the repeal of the national origins quota system (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236), the excise tax reduction (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44), the manpower training amendments (S 974 -- PL 89-15), the Older Americans Act (HR 3708 -- PL 89-73), the Water Quality Act (S 4 -- PL 89-234), foreign aid (HR 10871 -- PL 89-273), Appalachia aid (S 3 -- PL 89-4), a bill to ease bonding requirements for labor officials (HR 5883 -- PL 89-216), and several others. The AFL-CIO also counted as a legislative victory the defeat of the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103), which the AFL-CIO strongly opposed.

Important measures which the AFL-CIO supported but which were not passed were (aside from the labor bills listed earlier) "truth in lending" and "truth in packaging" (S 2275, S 985) and the Senate version of the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118).

AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Department. (Consists of AFL-CIO unions organizing workers in the construction industry; about 3.5 million members in all.) Considered 1965 to be one of Congress' "best years" because of enactment of the various health, welfare and education measures backed by the AFL-CIO as a whole, as well as the Building & Construction Trades Department. (See entry for AFL-CIO, directly above.) But was deeply disappointed because "no labor legislation passed other than the bonding bill" (HR 5883 -- PL 89-216). Gave its strongest support to the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77) and the common-site picketing bill (HR 10027), neither of which passed in 1965. HR 10027 would have allowed construction unions to shut down an entire construction job if the workers at one of the construction firms at the site were on strike. The bill was actually the number one priority measure for the Department, since it benefited construction unions directly; however, the Department agreed not to press for immediate passage of HR 10027 until Congress had acted on HR 77, which had higher priority with non-construction unions. Other important labor bills which did not pass, despite strong support from the Department, were the minimum wage and double overtime proposals (HR 10518, others), and the "industry fund" bill (HR 1153). The latter permitted employer contributions to trust funds, which would be administered jointly by employers and unions, for (1) promotion of products, product sales, product research, etc.; (2) creation of joint labor-management committees to arbitrate disputes over the interpretation of union contracts.

AFL-CIO Government Employees Council. (Consists of 31 AFL-CIO unions.) Supported a federal pay increase (HR 10281 -- PL 89-301); increases in retirement benefits for federal employees (HR 8469 -- PL 89-205); a bill (HR 6622 -- PL 89-114) to remove permanent personnel of the postal field service from the ceiling on the number of permanent federal employees; and the military construction authorization (HR 10775 -- PL 89-188), including the final provision requiring 30 days' prior notice to Congress before any defense installation could be shut down. Proposed that retired federal employees be made eligible for Medicare. The final Medicare provisions (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) made some -- though not most -- retired federal employees eligible.

AFL-CIO Maritime Committee. (Consists of AFL-CIO unions representing seamen and some shipbuilding workers, about 60,000 members in all.) Supported a bill (HR 4346 -- PL 89-127) to continue existing subsidy rates for construction and reconstruction of U.S. ships. Opposed Administration plans to close seven Public Health Service hospitals providing free treatment to merchant seamen; won a victory on this point when the Administration agreed to close only two of the hospitals immediately, to leave three open and to restudy whether to close the other two. Backed the following proposals, none of which received final approval by Congress in 1965: bills to impose various safety and other conditions and limitations on the operations of foreign-flag cruise ships (HR 2836, 6272, 10109, 10327), provided certain amendments were made; bills requiring various safety measures for towboats (HR 156, 723); bills to establish a Federal Maritime Administration as an independent agency (S 2667, HR 11355); "right to work" repeal (HR 77); and the minimum wage (HR 10518). Opposed S Res 144, authorizing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to investigate the legality of requirements that 50 percent of U.S. surplus agricultural commodities sold to Soviet bloc countries be transported in U.S. ships. The AFL-CIO Maritime Committee favored retaining the 50 percent requirement. S Res 144 was not approved in 1965.

American Federation of Teachers (AFL-CIO). (Represents 125,000 teachers.) Said Congress in 1965 "produced more and better educational and social legislation than any Congress in our history." The "big one" which received AFT backing was the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10). Also supported the Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329) and a bill establishing the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities (S 1483 -- PL 89-209).

Measures supported by the AFT which did not receive final Congressional approval in 1965 were a bill to raise overseas teachers' salaries (HR 6845); a bill to provide sabbatical leave study grants to elementary and secondary school teachers (HR 10622); the Senate version of the D.C. home rule bill (S 1118); a bill to give elementary and secondary school teachers income tax deductions for expenditures toward higher education (S 2311); a bill to delete the loyalty oath requirement from the National Defense Education Act (HR 8330); the "truth in lending" (S 2275) and "truth in packaging" (S 985) bills; and the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77).

International Brotherhood of Teamsters (Ind.). (Represents 1.8 million workers.) Said "Congress did very well by every segment of our society except labor.... Labor wound up with a goose-egg." Among the measures strongly supported by the Teamsters but not receiving final Congressional approval in 1965 were: the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77); the minimum wage bill (HR 10518); and the unemployment compensation bill (HR 8282). Said that about the only new 1965 law directly benefiting labor was the relatively minor bill (HR 5883 -- PL 89-216) easing the bonding requirements for union officers. Major non-labor bills for which the Teamsters worked in 1965 included Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10). Opposed President Johnson's unsuccessful proposals to increase highway user taxes. Criticized alleged invasions of privacy, by such means as wire tapping, by various agencies of the Federal Government. Supported bills -- which were not enacted in 1965 -- to restrict federal release of information to the press in criminal cases (S 290), and to force compliance with the constitutional requirement of speedy trial for defendants in criminal cases (S 291). Opposed the D.C. omnibus crime bill (HR 5688), which did not ultimately pass in 1965, particularly the House provision allowing six-hour investigative arrests.

Railway Labor Executives Assn. (Represents 21 unions.) Supported five bills of special interest to railroad workers: HR 6173 and HR 6174, to give the Interstate Commerce Commission greater authority over railroad safety and to provide stronger penalties for violations of certain safety statutes (no action); HR 706, to establish special adjustment boards -- when requested by either employees or carriers -- to arbitrate specific disputes otherwise referable to the National Railroad Adjustment Board (action not completed in 1965); HR 7371, to amend the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (action not completed in 1965); and HR 10874 (enacted: PL 89-212), amending the Railroad Retirement Act. Also supported the bill (S 1588 -- PL 89-220) providing for research and development in high-speed ground transportation.

On non-rail matters was "very pleased" with the 1965 session, except for Congress' failure to complete action on the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77). Was "very happy with" the passage of Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) and many of the education, health and welfare bills supported by most labor groups (see above).

United Mine Workers of America (Ind.). (Claims 450,000 members.) Major legislative objective in 1965 was enactment of the small coal mine safety bill (HR 3584) which passed the House but not the Senate. Strongly opposed federal subsidies to nuclear-electric power plants, for which funds were included in the Atomic Energy Act authorization bill (HR 8122 -- PL 89-32); and also strongly opposed continuation without change of the Price-Anderson Act which, in effect, provided federal insurance to private nuclear reactors against claims resulting from nuclear accidents. The Act was nevertheless extended by Congress (S 2042 -- PL 89-210). Union's position on the nuclear legislation was based on contention that federal aid gave nuclear power industry unfair advantage over coal in competition between fuels. Also opposed unsuccessfully the authorization of the Dickey-Lincoln School federal hydroelectric power project, and certain other federal hydroelectric projects, in the river-harbor-flood control project bill (S 2300 -- PL 89-298). Said federal hydroelectric plants were not needed when coal was available for power generation. Summarized position on other legislation (health, education, welfare, etc.) by saying "practically everything that the AFL-CIO was for, we were for," including the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77) which was not enacted in 1965. Said that, in general, the UMWA "didn't oppose the Johnson Administration on anything but hydroelectric plants and atomic energy."

Farm

American Farm Bureau Federation. Strongly opposed the Administration's omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321). Favored the Sugar Act extension bill (HR 11135 -- PL 89-331) but felt domestic producers should have fared better. Was one of the major supporters of the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103) and was disappointed with its failure to be enacted. Was pleased, however, by Congress' failure to complete action on the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77) and minimum wage bill (HR 10518), both of which the AFBF opposed.

American National Cattlemen's Assn. (Represents approximately 270,000 ranchers, feeders and producers of beef cattle.) "Most significant" items were the feed grain and diverted acres provisions of the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-231). "Not wholly satisfied" with the final feed grain provisions because "there is altogether too much flexibility given to the Secretary of Agriculture in determining the programs." But was happy that "Congress has made it explicit that...grazing (of cattle on diverted acres) will not be permitted." Was "very disappointed" with the Senate rejection of the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment amendment (S J Res 2, S J Res 103), which would have maintained "a check and balance...between those not owning property and those who have to share such a great burden in property taxes." Opposed "right to work" repeal (HR 77, which was not enacted) as "wrong" as a matter of human rights. Opposed extension of minimum wage laws to agriculture, as provided in the minimum wage bill (HR 10518) which did not pass in 1965; such extension "would inflict undue hardship on agricultural producers and...increase retail costs of food." Supported HR 10, which did not pass, to modify the 1962 self-employed retirement provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

National Council of Farmer Cooperatives. (Represents more than 100 regional cooperative associations with about 3,000,000 members in all.) Prime interest in 1965 was to block enactment of any provisions that would put farm workers under the federal minimum wage law or would reduce or end the canning industry's exemptions from overtime provisions of the law; was gratified that bills (HR 10518, others) including provisions of these types did not pass in 1965. Also was strongly opposed to the "right to work" repeal bill (HR 77) which did not pass.

National Farmers Union. (Represents 250,000 farm families.) Rated 1965 as an "outstanding year" because "the farm bill has our stamp on it" (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321), embodying basically all of the major provisions favored by the NFU. Other successes were the modification of the Governor's veto in poverty program activities (HR 8283 -- PL 89-253), and the passage of the housing (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117) and education (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10) bills. A major disappointment was the failure to bring forth "truth in packaging" bill (S 985).

National Grange. (Represents 800,000 farmers and individuals "interested in rural America.") Spent most of its efforts on the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321). Actively supported the bill as a whole. Commented as follows on certain specific provisions: favored the Administration proposal to support wheat for domestic food use at 100 percent of parity through a certificate program; opposed changes in this provision which had the effect of making the Treasury -- rather than the millers -- bear part of the support cost of domestic food wheat. Successfully opposed proposals to change Commodity Credit Corp. resale levels for wheat and to change support and resale levels for feed grains. Unsuccessfully backed proposals to institute a rice certificate program and to shift determinations as to the need for imports of foreign workers for farm labor from the Labor to the Agriculture Department. Supported the rural water systems bill (S 1766 -- PL 89-240). Opposed the highway beautification bill (S 2084 -- PL 89-285), saying the problem was best left to the states and also that funds should not be diverted from the highway program for beautification purposes. Unsuccessfully supported the "truth in lending" and "truth in packaging" bills (S 2275, S 985). Gave strong support to the Dirksen (R Ill.) reapportionment proposals (S J Res 2, S J Res 103), which did not pass.

National Milk Producers Federation. (Represents 130 dairy cooperatives and 500 other dairy organizations, with a total membership of about 500,000 dairy farmers in 49 states.) Success of program in 1965 was "very good." The two "big" successes were inclusion in the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321) of provisions authorizing a "Class I base plan" for milk, and authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to buy dairy products on the open market if Government stocks became inadequate to meet needs of authorized federal overseas and domestic distribution programs. The provision of substantial funds for the school milk and school lunch programs in the Agriculture Appropriations Act (HR 8370 -- PL 89-316) was counted as a success, as was the extension until June 30, 1966, in the Economic Opportunity Amendments (HR 8283 -- PL 89-253) of an indemnity program for dairy farmers for milk spoiled by pesticide residues.

Military and Veterans

American Legion. (Represents approximately 2.7 million veterans.) Said the 1965 session "was not completely satisfactory in that it didn't do certain things favored by us," although the "major" legislation favored by the Legion was passed -- a bill (HR 168 -- PL 89-311) increasing veterans' disability compensation. Unsuccessfully sought legislation to prevent loss or reduction in war veterans' pensions by veterans whose incomes exceeded the maximum income limit because of increases in Social Security payments resulting from the 1965 Social Security bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97). Opposed provisions of the immigration bill (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236) which eliminated the national origins quota system; favored retention of the national origins quota system. However, submitted five conditions for immigration legislation, including imposition of a Western Hemisphere limitation. All five were included in the final immigration bill and, therefore, the Legion considered the bill acceptable, although it still didn't support it. Strongly opposed the planned closure of 11 federal veterans' hospitals and four old soldiers' homes, and won a substantial victory when the Johnson Administration eventually agreed to close only six of the hospitals and two of the old soldiers' homes. Backed the "cold war GI bill" (S 9), which, though not enacted in 1965, became law in 1966.

Disabled American Veterans. (Represents 200,000 disabled veterans.) Veterans' disability compensation increases (HR 168 -- PL 89-311); a bill (HR 206 -- PL 89-137) providing an average 30-percent, cost-of-living increase in subsistence allowances for disabled veterans receiving vocational rehabilitation training; a bill (HR 227 -- PL 89-349) extending to children of pre-World War II veterans the benefits of the war orphans' educational assistance program; a bill (HR 205 -- PL 89-222) increasing the educational assistance allowances payable under the war orphans educational assistance program; and a bill (S 2127 -- PL 89-214) providing special group life insurance for servicemen were praised.

Veterans of Foreign Wars. (Represents 1.3 million veterans.) Supported a bill (HR 3225), which was not passed, providing for a 15 percent increase in veterans' disability compensation rates; but said the provisions of the disability compensation measure which was eventually passed -- HR 168 (PL 89-311) -- contained many of the desirable features sought in HR 3225 although raising benefits only about 10 percent on the average. Supported the measures providing a 30-percent, cost-of-living increase in subsistence allowances under the veterans' vocational rehabilitation program (HR 206 -- PL 89-137) and establishing a group life insurance program for members of the armed forces (S 2127 -- PL 89-214). Supported the bill (S 9, ultimately enacted in 1966) creating a "cold war GI bill." Changed position on the latter issue: previously had favored restricting coverage to veterans who served in areas of hostilities, but subsequently came to support inclusion of all veterans, as provided in the final version of S 9.

Professional

American Assn. of School Administrators. (Represents 18,000 school administrators.) Considered the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10) the "big one" and strongly supported its passage.

American Council on Education. (Represents 1,150 colleges and universities and 275 educational associations.) The program proposed in January 1965 by the Council was "almost totally enacted" by passage of the Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329), the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10) and the Health Professions Educational Assistance Amendments (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290). Also supported a bill (S 1212), which was not enacted, to assist colleges in the establishment, strengthening, and maintenance of programs on foreign development.

American Dental Assn. (Represents 100,000 dentists and dental students.) Said that "looking at it realistically...we had a pretty successful year." In general, supported Johnson Administration health programs except for the Medicare program (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97); although opposing the latter, was happy that the definition of "physician" in the bill included dentists for the purpose of performing oral surgery. Strongly supported five other pieces of legislation: the Health Professions Educational Assistance Amendments (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290), which included various types of aid to dental schools and dental students; the Medical Library Assistance Act (S 597 -- PL 89-291), which included aid to dental libraries; the Department of HEW funds bill (HR 7765 -- PL 89-156), which increased Public Health Service funds for dental purposes; parts of the Medicare-Social Security bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) which provided health care (including dental care) for needy children (the bill also provided professional training for health and related care, including dental, for crippled children); and the Health Research Facilities Act (HR 2984 -- PL 89-115), expanding an existing program of aid for health research facilities, including dental.

American Hospital Assn. (Represents 7,000 hospitals containing approximately 90 percent of the nation's hospital beds.) Said many of its major legislative goals for the 1965 session were achieved, although was deeply disappointed that the final Medicare bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) did not include payment for the services of specialists, billed through hospitals, as part of the "basic" Medicare benefits package. (The final bill provided for payment of specialists' fees only under the supplementary, voluntary medical benefits plan.) Said about half the organization's total legislative effort in 1965 was spent on the unsuccessful campaign to get specialists included in the "basic" Medicare benefits package. Supported the following major bills that were enacted: Health Research Facilities Act Amendments (HR 2984 -- PL 89-115); mental health staffing (HR 2985 -- PL 89-105); Community Health Services Extension Amendments (S 510 -- PL 89-109); Medical Library Assistance Act (S 597

CQ Fact Sheet On Lobby Spending

LOBBIES REPORT EXPENDITURES OF $4.2 MILLION IN 1964

Congressional Quarterly's annual lobby spending survey showed that 287 organizations reported spending $4,223,277.39 in 1964 to influence Congress on legislation. The figure was slightly less than the $4,223,604.80 reported spent in 1963. (1964 Almanac p. 902)

The totals were compiled by Congressional Quarterly from quarterly lobby spending reports which were printed in the Congressional Record after being filed with the Clerk of the House. Under the 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, organizations engaging in lobbying activities designed to influence Congress on legislation must file quarterly reports listing the amount spent on lobbying, unless they are exempt from the law. The amounts reported by each of the 287 organizations for 1964 are listed on p. 1454-57.

Filing Rules, Loopholes

The 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act required organizations to file lobby spending reports if they solicit, collect or receive money for the principal purpose of influencing Congress on legislation.

In 1954, the Supreme Court, in U.S. v. Harriss (347 U.S. 612) handed down the first and only definitive Supreme Court interpretation of the 1946 Act. The Court's interpretation, plus a number of exemptions specifically written into the law by Congress in 1946, left a relatively wide area of discretion for organizations to refuse to file spending reports on grounds they are not covered by the specific terms of the law -- even though they engage in activities which, in everyday speech, are normally called "lobbying." (For text of Supreme Court decision, see 1954 Almanac p. 674)

According to the 1946 law as interpreted by the Court, organizations are required to file spending reports only if they obtain money for the principal purpose of engaging in lobbying of Congress, and only if the lobbying involves direct communications with Members of Congress. Some organizations refuse to file lobby spending reports on the grounds that, while they do lobby Congress, that is not the principal purpose for which they obtain any of their money. Others refuse to file on the grounds that their activities do not involve direct contacts with Congress, but only general attempts to influence the public on federal policies.

Despite these loopholes, most organizations report their lobby spending. They are free, however, to determine for themselves which portion of their total organizational spending should be considered attributable to lobbying, and therefore reported, and which portions are attributable to research, public information work and other activities not connected with influencing Congress directly on legislation. There is no federal office or officer designated to check the accuracy or completeness of the reports filed. The Clerk of the House acknowledges receipt of each report and files it, but does not check contents.

25 Top Spenders

The 25 top spenders of the 287 organizations filing lobby spending reports for 1964 are listed below, with comparative figures for 1963. (For legislative goals of top spenders, see next page.)

Legislative Goals of Top Spenders

Of the 287 groups filing lobby spending reports for 1964, only one listed expenditures over $300,000. Six others listed expenditures in excess of $100,000 and 18 others reported spending more than $45,000.

These 25 groups accounted for $2,222,541.63 -- 52.6 percent of the total spending reported in 1964. The legislative programs of the top spenders in 1964 are described below.

Anti-Civil Rights Group. The Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms was the top lobby spender. It reported spending $319,825 in 1964 -- the highest yearly spending figure reported by any group since 1953.

The Committee, which first registered as a lobbying organization Aug. 8, 1963, was represented by John C. Satterfield, former president (1961-62) of the American Bar Assn. and financed by such groups as the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission and the corresponding agencies in other states. Its purpose was to oppose the civil rights bill. (1964 Almanac p. 338)

Representing an undetermined number of individuals "who want to take a stand and oppose the civil rights bill," the Committee contended the bill was "unconstitutional and discriminatory" and "an aggrandisement of federal power at the expense of the state and local governments." After the bill was enacted, the Committee ceased its activities. The entire $319,825 was reported spent during the first and second quarters of 1964.

AFL-CIO. In 1964 (as in 1961, 1962 and 1963) the AFL-CIO occupied second place in the list of top lobby spenders. The labor federation, representing about 13 million union members, spent $153,542 in 1964. The AFL-CIO felt that the 88th Congress had "made unusual and historic contributions to the goal of a better society in America and to the cause of peace and freedom on earth." It considered as major successes in 1964: the Civil Rights Act (1964 Almanac p. 338); the income tax cut (1964 Almanac p. 518); the inclusion of a provision in the Mass Transportation Act of 1964 (1964 Almanac p. 556) to protect the interests of transit workers affected by federal assistance; the Davis-Bacon Act amendments (1964 Almanac p. 576); the federal pay raise (1964 Almanac p. 416); the anti-poverty bill (1964 Almanac p. 208); Defense Education Act amendments (1964 Almanac p. 259); and the various resource conservation bills enacted (1964 Almanac p. 474).

Major disappointments were Congress' failure in 1964 to provide hospital care for the aged (1964 Almanac p. 231); to provide or create enough jobs "to wipe out the persistent plague of unemployment"; to increase the minimum wage to $2 an hour and decrease the statutory workweek to 35 hours with double time for overtime (1964 Almanac p. 572, 574); and to pass a general aid-to-education bill or the President's Appalachia bill. (1964 Almanac p. 259, 288)

Postal Clerks. The United Federation of Postal Clerks (AFL-CIO), top lobby spender of 1963, reported spending the third highest amount in 1964, $131,913.

With a membership of 145,000 postal clerks across the country, the Federation regarded the passage of a federal pay raise as a major accomplishment. (1964 Almanac p. 416) It was unsuccessful in 1964 attempts to: eliminate the work-measurement system in use by the Post Office Department; liberalize retirement benefits; increase the Government contribution to the premium cost of federal employees' life insurance and health benefits programs; and provide "true" overtime pay for postal employees.

Peace Group. The Council for a Livable World in 1964, its first year of lobbying, reported spending $123,982. The Council, run by a board consisting primarily of scientists and supported by about 10,000 contributors, said it was interested in disarmament on a quid pro quo basis with adequate inspection and safeguards, and in all attempts to lessen international tension.

The Council said that in 1964 it was primarily interested in supporting certain selected candidates for election and did little work directly on legislation. A large portion of the expenditures reported represented contributions to candidates.

American Legion. The American Legion, representing 2.7 million veterans and 1 million members of their ladies' auxiliary, was the fifth highest spender in 1964 with $123,914. The Legion felt that it was "very fortunate" in 1964. It was particularly pleased by the passage of HR 1927, which increased non-service-connected disability and death pensions for veterans and reopened for one year the eligibility of disabled World War II and Korean War veterans to apply for National Service Life Insurance. (1964 Almanac p. 285) Another major victory for the American Legion was the passage of the veterans' nursing care bill, which the Legion said corresponded closely to proposals it had previously made. (1964 Almanac p. 284)

Farm Bureau. The American Farm Bureau Federation, representing 1,647,455 farm families, was the sixth highest spender in 1964 with $123,645. The Federation strongly but unsuccessfully opposed the wheat-cotton bill. (1964 Almanac p. 98) Another setback for the Federation position was passage of the anti-poverty bill. (1964 Almanac p. 208) The Farm Bureau also opposed the Social Security medical care bill which was not passed in 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 231)

Machinists' Union. District Lodge #44 of the International Assn. of Machinists (AFL-CIO) was the seventh and final group which reported spending over $100,000 in 1964. District Lodge #44, which spent $123,569, is the national office for the federal employee group of the IAM. The group said it was exclusively interested in federal employee legislation. Major priority items were the federal pay raise bill and the closing of Government installations. The pay raise bill, which the union supported, was passed. (1964 Almanac p. 416) District Lodge #44 strongly opposed the planned closures of shipyards and military bases announced by Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara Nov. 18, 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 160) The fight to prevent the closures continued on into 1965. Also of interest was the dual compensation bill regulating employment of civilians in more than one federal position. The bill was passed. (1964 Almanac p. 423)

Savings & Loan League. The U.S. Savings and Loan League spent $98,233 in 1964. It represented 5,100 savings and loan institutions, whose activities by law were limited to investments in Government securities and one- to four-family homes. The League won a major victory when many provisions which it had strongly supported in previous years were included in the 1964 housing bill. (1964 Almanac p. 274) The bill, among other things, permitted the savings and loan groups to make educational loans to college students (the first non-housing loans allowed to savings and loan institutions); permitted them to invest in municipal bonds; enlarged their permitted lending area to 100 miles from the home office, instead of 50; and made certain other changes. The League also supported legislation to increase from $10,000 to $20,000 the amount of federal insurance on accounts in savings and loan institutions, but the measure -- opposed by other types of banks represented by the American Bankers Assn. and also opposed by the Administration -- was killed on the House floor May 27, 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 583)

Housing Conference. The National Housing Conference Inc. spent $88,224 in 1964. The Conference placed its major emphasis on the 1964 housing bill, which it supported. (1964 Almanac p. 274) It also strongly supported the Mass Transportation Act. (1964 Almanac p. 556) The Conference supported unsuccessful proposals to expand and extend the accelerated public works program and the 1961 Area Redevelopment Act. (1964 Almanac p. 294)

National Farmers Union. The National Farmers Union (Farmer's Educational and Cooperative Union of America), representing 250,000 farm families (750,000 persons), reported spending $80,946 for lobbying in 1964. The NFU strongly favored the wheat-cotton bill (1964 Almanac p. 98), and the establishment of a permanent food stamp program (1964 Almanac p. 110). It opposed cuts in foreign aid (1964 Almanac p. 312) and supported the anti-poverty bill. (1964 Almanac p. 208)

Teamsters' Union. The International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Ind.), the nation's largest union with over 1.5 million members, spent $73,196 in 1964. The union supported, among other things, the Civil Rights Act and Davis-Bacon Act amendments, both of which were enacted (1964 Almanac p. 338, 576), and the minimum wage extension and medicare bills, which failed to pass. (1964 Almanac p. 231, 574) It opposed an Administration bill to authorize double time for overtime because of fears that the bill would make the Secretary of Labor "an economic czar of all industry." (1964 Almanac p. 572) The union proposed an alternate plan which included the use in some industries of a 32-hour workweek.

Independent Businesses. The National Federation of Independent Business Inc., which claims to represent 200,000 individual businesses and professional men, spent $67,143. Its two primary goals were to obtain vigorous enforcement of the antitrust provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act and to win authority to report legislation for the Senate Select Small Business Committee. An amendment by Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) to grant such authority to the Committee was defeated on the Senate floor Aug. 13, 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 594)

Trucking Assns. American Trucking Assns. Inc., the representative of 50 state trucking associations and various trucking conferences, spent $64,271 in 1964. Its predominant interest was in HR 9903, a compromise bill offered by Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.) as a solution to the long dispute over the exemption from Interstate Commerce Commission minimum rate regulation of water carriers and certain types of trucking such as agricultural trucking. The Harris compromise extended regulation in some areas and deregulated in others. The American Trucking Assns. found the bill "acceptable." The major opposition came from the Anti-Monopoly Transportation Conference, which was made up chiefly of water carriers and coal interests. The bill was eventually killed. (1964 Almanac p. 551)

Revenue Bonds. The Committee for Study of Revenue Bond Financing spent $63,720. The Committee represents about 500 (90 percent) of the nation's dealers in municipal securities. The group's only interest was to defeat legislation that would allow commercial banks to underwrite and deal as securities dealers in securities issued by state and local governments (HR 5845, S 828, HR 2060, HR 8076). The power of commercial banks to underwrite state and municipal revenue bonds, together with the power to underwrite stocks, was taken away from commercial banks in the Banking Act of 1933. HR 5845, sponsored by Rep. Fernand J. St. Germain (D R.I.), was supported by the Comptroller of the Currency and opposed by the Federal Reserve Board chairman and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. HR 5845 was studied by the House Banking and Currency Committee in the 88th Congress but no further action was taken. HR 5845 was supported by the Committee for Broadening Commercial Bank Participation in Public Financing.

Letter Carriers. The National Assn. of Letter Carriers (AFL-CIO), with 150,000 members, reported $60,931. The union succeeded in reaching its main 1964 objective: passage of the federal pay raise bill. (1964 Almanac p. 416) The union was unsuccessful in attempts to obtain an increase in retirement benefits. It also sought "sufficient" appropriations for the Post Office Department, and said this effort was partly successful, although the union would have preferred an even larger appropriation for the Post Office Department. (1964 Almanac p. 166)

National Education Assn. The Division of Federal Relations of the National Education Assn. spent $60,009 in 1964. The NEA, with a membership of 943,000, regarded the 1964 session of Congress a great success.

The NEA said it favored "substantial federal support for the whole of public education at all levels and of all types."

Among the major bills supported by the NEA which passed in 1964 were: the Library Services and Construction Act (1964 Almanac p. 268); the 1964 Civil Rights Act (1964 Almanac p. 338); the anti-poverty bill, which was called an "education-oriented measure" by the NEA (1964 Almanac p. 208); and a bill which extended and expanded both the National Defense Education Act and the impacted areas program. (1964 Almanac p. 259)

Rivers & Harbors. The National Rivers and Harbors Congress spent $59,776. The 5,000 organizational and individual members, including federal, state, and local government agencies, were interested in water resources and development. The Rivers and Harbors Congress said "tremendous strides" were made in this area in 1964. It was particularly interested in the maintenance of "adequate" appropriations and "sufficient" new starts in development of water resources. The group said it was well pleased with the funds and new starts provided in the fiscal 1965 Public Works Appropriations Act (1964 Almanac p. 190, 503); favored the Water Research Act which was passed in 1964, new Missouri River Basin authorizations, the proposed Water Planning Act, and various bills to provide for water-based recreation and outdoor resource development and reclamation projects, a number of which were enacted. (For summary of water and recreation legislation in 1964, see 1964 Almanac p. 474, 501.)

Rural Letter Carriers. The National Rural Letter Carriers Assn. (Ind.), with 43,000 members, spent $59,364 in 1964. The union supported the federal pay raise bill enacted in 1964 (1964 Almanac p. 416) and a bill which improved benefits under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959 (PL 88-284). The union was unsuccessful in attempts to obtain an increase in retirement benefits.

Restaurant Assn. The National Restaurant Assn., representing over 100,000 individual restaurants through its more than 10,000 members (restaurant owners and managers), spent $55,499. Its legislative activities centered around opposition to proposals -- in connection with minimum wage and Social Security bills -- to cover restaurants under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and to require employers to match an employee's Social Security payroll tax on tips. Neither proposal was enacted in 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 574, 231)

Investment Firm. Investors Diversified Services Inc. reported spending $51,572 in 1964. The firm's principal activity was in support of an amendment to the Internal Revenue Code. The amendment allowed certain financial institutions (such as Investors Syndicate of America, a subsidiary of Investors Diversified Services) to deduct interest payments on money invested in certificates of the institution, in cases where the institution invested no more than 15 percent of its assets in state and local bonds on which the interest was exempt from federal taxation. This provision became law as a part of the 1964 tax cut bill. (1964 Almanac p. 524)

Reclamation. The National Reclamation Assn. reported spending $51,376 in 1964. The association said reclamation was "a great conservation program, especially from the viewpoint of the Western half of the United States." The association said that from its standpoint "the 88th Congress was not the greatest conservation Congress," as many others had been calling it. Three of the major bills supported by the group which passed were S 2, the water research bill (1964 Almanac p. 507); HR 3846, which established a Land and Water Conservation Fund (1964 Almanac p. 477); and HR 130 (PL 88-561), to provide compensation for rights-of-way required for reclamation projects. Among the bills supported by the National Reclamation Assn. which did not pass in 1964 were the Federal Water Project Recreation Act (1964 Almanac p. 503); the Water Resources Planning Act (1964 Almanac p. 501); the Small Reclamation Projects Act amendments (1964 Almanac p. 503); the state water rights bill (S 1275); and two bills involving compensation for federal taking of irrigable lands for non-agricultural uses (S 1879, HR 5565). Of the 10 specific new reclamation projects which were strongly supported by the association, five were authorized (Crooked River, Dixie, Fruitland Mesa, Savery-Pot Hook and Teton Basin). The other five were not (Auburn-Folsom South, Columbus Bend, Garrison, Nebraska Mid-State and Waurika). (1964 Almanac p. 501)

Home Builders. The National Assn. of Home Builders spent $49,725 in 1964. The association generally supported the Housing Act of 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 274) It opposed, however, an Administration proposal for authorities to encourage the development of "new towns." This provision was not included in the final legislation. The NAHB supported urban renewal.

Textile Group. The American Textile Manufacturers Institute spent $47,189 in 1964. Its only major interest was the enactment of legislation to reduce the raw cotton price for domestic cotton mills. The ATMI won a major victory when such a program was established in the 1964 wheat-cotton bill. (1964 Almanac p. 98)

AMA. The American Medical Assn. spent $45,515 in 1964. Representing 205,000 physicians, the AMA was interested in all legislation related to health care. Its principal goal in 1964 was to defeat the proposed Social Security medical care program. The 1964 bill to establish this program ultimately failed to pass. (1964 Almanac p. 231) The AMA supported the extension of the Hill-Burton Act of 1964 but suggested that more emphasis should be placed on the modernization and improvement of existing facilities. These recommendations were partly met by the 1964 Hill-Burton Act amendments. (1964 Almanac p. 242)

Petroleum. The American Petroleum Institute spent $45,465 in 1964. The Institute, representing 8,000 individuals and companies, was principally interested in assuring that provisions of the Revenue Act of 1964 (1964 Almanac p. 518), the Wilderness Act (1964 Almanac p. 485), and a water pollution control bill (1964 Almanac p. 501) were favorable to the petroleum industry.

287 Lobby Groups List Their Spending in 1964

Following is a list of 287 lobby groups and the amounts each reported spending in 1964 for lobbying activities. The figures are based on quarterly spending reports filed with the Clerk of the House and printed in the Congressional Record. In a few cases, reports filed too late to appear in the Record were checked by Congressional Quarterly from the House Clerk's files.

The organizations are divided alphabetically into six categories: Business, Citizens, Employee and Labor, Farm, Military and Veterans, and Professional.

The number of asterisks following a spending figure indicates the last quarter for which a report was made: a single asterisk (*) for the first quarter, a double asterisk () for the second quarter, and three asterisks () for the third quarter. All others reported at the end of the fourth quarter. Groups that filed reports but reported no spending are marked "None."

450 NEW LOBBYIST REGISTRATIONS FILED IN 1965

Business spokesmen formed by far the largest bloc among the 450 persons and organizations that registered with the Clerk of the House as lobbyists between the end of the 1964 session of Congress and the end of the 1965 session.

Congressional Quarterly's annual survey of the lobbyist registrations filed under the 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act showed that from Oct. 4, 1964 (the day after the 1964 session adjourned), through Oct. 23, 1965 (the day the 1965 session concluded), 450 new lobbyist registrations were filed, bringing the grand total since passage of the 1946 Act to 7,601 registrations.

Although the new registrations represented many diverse economic and social interests, business spokesmen were overwhelmingly the largest group, accounting for well over half the total. The figures below show the number of registrants for different interest groups:

Interest Group	Number of Registrants
Business Groups	246
Citizens' Groups	53
Farm Groups	23
Foreign Groups	24
Individuals	32
Labor & Employee Groups	42
Military & Veterans' Groups	3
Professional Groups	27
TOTAL	450

Range of Interests

The specific objectives of different lobbyists who registered in 1965 ranged widely. Some groups had a single basic legislative objective. For example, the National Right to Work Committee, for which five individuals registered in 1965, had as its only purpose to defeat labor union proposals for repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permitted states to pass "right to work" laws. (See p. 818)

Similarly, the Single Persons Tax Reform Lobby was interested solely in obtaining head-of-household status in federal income tax law for certain categories of single persons; the National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee sought only to do away with that Committee (see p.1517); and the Population Crisis Committee was interested primarily in advancing contraception and birth control. (See p. 311)

Other groups had a broad roster of legislative objectives. The AFL-CIO, for example, for which three new lobbyists registered in 1965, was interested in "all bills affecting the welfare of the country generally, and specifically those affecting workers" (including repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act provision allowing state "right to work" laws).

The American Conservative Union, for which former Rep. Donald C. Bruce (R Ind. 1961-65) registered, stated as its lobbying objective "to support the passage of legislation consistent with the Constitution...and to oppose any legislation inconsistent with the Constitution."

The John Birch Society, whose registrant was Reed A. Benson, son of former Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson (1953-61), said it was interested in "general legislation."

The Friends Committee on National Legislation, in registering two new lobbyists in 1965, listed support and development of the United Nations, foreign aid, immigration legislation, and the seating of Red China in the UN among its many objectives.

The American Bankers Assn., for which three new registrants filed in 1965, said it was interested in "legislation affecting the banking industry." The ABA played a major role in action on the bank merger bill. (See p. 848)

Four Key Issues

Among the measures cited by new registrants as their sole or chief concern in lobbying, four were outstanding: the excise tax reduction bill (HR 8371 -- PL 89-44); the Social Security-medicare bill (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97); the Sugar Act extension bill (HR 11135 -- PL 89-331); and the omnibus farm bill (HR 9811 -- PL 89-321). More new registrants said they were interested in these bills than any other legislation. (See p. 835, 236, 140, 114)

Excise Tax Cut. The excise tax reduction proposals finally handled in HR 8371 were cited by registrants for 16 different trade groups seeking a reduction or elimination of excise taxes on their products. Most of them listed no other legislative objective.

The automobile industry was particularly well represented. One auto industry group, the Committee for Automobile Excise Tax Repeal, registered four lobbyists, including ex-Rep. Victor A. Knox (R Mich. 1953-65) and Theodore O. Yntema of the Ford Motor Co., and said it was prepared to lay out $100,000 on expenses. Several other registrants also filed for automobile industry groups. The final version of the Administration-backed excise tax bill did sharply cut automobile excise taxes, as well as excise taxes on nearly all of the products of concern to the other 15 groups.

Following were the 16 groups whose spokesmen cited excise tax reduction as a lobbying objective:

Associated Telephone Answering Exchanges (answering service facilities); Assn. of Petroleum Refiners (favored retention of excise tax on lubricating oil); Automobile Manufacturers Assn. Taxation Committee (automobiles); automotive parts and accessories manufacturers, a group of 10 firms (auto parts); Brunswick Corp. (sporting goods); Business Equipment Manufacturers Assn. (business machines); Cigar Manufacturers Assn. of America (cigars); Club Managers Assn. (country clubs, social clubs, business clubs); Committee for Automobile Excise Tax Repeal (automobiles); Institute of High Fidelity (hi-fi components); Light Bulb Manufacturers Excise Tax Committee (bulbs and tubes); Motor Equipment Manufacturers Assn. (auto parts and accessories); National Electrical Manufacturers Assn. (refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners, other appliances); Ronson Corp. (products made by company); U.S. Independent Telephone Assn. (communications); U.S. Playing Card Co. and a group of other playing card firms (playing cards).

Social Security-Medicare. The Social Security-medicare bill (HR 6675) also drew a large number of new lobbyist registrants. Lobbyists for nine organiza-

Registration Totals

The 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act required any person or group (except public officials) who, for pay, attempted to influence federal legislation, to register with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. The law did not provide any specific way to withdraw a registration once it was filed, and it was vague on other procedural points. Some lobbyists follow the practice of registering anew each session, even if they still represent the same client. Others register only once for each client. The year-by-year breakdown of all registrations (including duplications) since the law was enacted is shown below. Years are calendar years unless otherwise indicated.

tions specifically mentioned the bill (or earlier versions) as a major concern in their lobbying, in nearly all cases referring to the medical care provisions. They were: Aetna Life and Aetna Casualty and Surety Co. (oposed various portions); American College of Radiology (interested in portions on radiology); American Insurance Assn. (sought changes in various portions); American Optometric Assn.; Blue Cross (favored revisions); College of American Pathologists; Massachusetts General Hospital (favored the bill); Pacific Health Plan (favored a specific amendment relating to prepaid medical service plans' inclusion); and Travelers Insurance Co. (opposed medical care portions.)

Many of the groups most actively working for or against the medical care provisions, such as the AFL-CIO (for) and the American Medical Assn. (against), did not specifically allude to it in new registrations filed by spokesmen in 1965, which were couched in general terms.

Sugar Act. The Sugar Act extension bill (HR 11135), dividing the profitable United States' sugar market among domestic and foreign sugar companies, produced new lobbyist registrations on behalf of 16 different groups (in some cases, a single registration covered several countries). All the lobbyists had the same objective: to obtain a favorable sugar quota for their clients. The 16 groups:

American Sugar Cane League of the U.S.; Associated Sugar Producers of Guadeloupe and Martinique; Assn. of Sugar Producers of Puerto Rico; British West Indies Sugar Assn. and similar groups in Ecuador, Panama and British Honduras (one registration filed for all these together); Chinese Government (Taiwan); Colonial Sugar Refining of Australia; Comision Nacional par el Estudio de la Cana y el Azucar (Bolivia); Comite de Productores de Azucar (Peru); Florida Sugar Cane League; Imperial Sugar Co. of Texas; National Federation of Sugarcane Planters (Philippines); Philippine Sugar Assn.; Rhodesia Sugar Assn.; Swaziland Sugar Assn.; Talisman Sugar Corp.; Thailand Government Ministry of Industry.

Farm Bill. The omnibus farm bill (HR 9811) also drew heavy interest from new registrants. Among those alluding to the bill directly or indirectly in their registrations were registrants for the Committee for a Free Cotton Market (which said it had $100,000 to spend for expenses); the Corn Starch Industry Committee; the Emergency Committee to Protect Cotton Growers (favored the bill); General Mills; Midwest Solvents; the National Farmers Organization (favored the bill); the National Rice Users Conference (opposed a domestic parity certificate program for rice); the Wheat Consumers Committee (farm, labor and consumer group spokesmen favoring the bill); and the Wheat Users Committee (millers, baking firms and unions, and others opposing the initial Administration wheat provisions).

Several other organizations were also deeply involved in action on the farm bill -- the American Farm Bureau Federation, National Farmers Union, National Cotton Council, National Grange -- but did not file new registrations specifically mentioning it.

Former Officials Who Registered

The 450 new registrants included a large number of former federal officials and Congressmen who registered as lobbyists for the first time or for new clients in 1965. (For earlier ex-Congressmen registrants, see 1963 Almanac p. 1041; 1964 Almanac p. 910.)

Ex-Congressmen. Two former Senators and eight former House Members registered:

Ex-Sen. J.J. Hickey (D Wyo. 1961-62) registered for the Union Pacific Railroad.

Ex-Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y. House 1947-59; Senate 1959-65) registered for the Population Crisis Committee. (Keating later was elected to the New York State Court of Appeals.)

Ex-Rep. Donald C. Bruce (R Ind. 1961-65) registered for the American Conservative Union. (Bruce gave up this new post Oct. 27, 1965.)

Ex-Rep. Clifford Davis (D Tenn. 1940-65) registered for Louisville Gas and Electric and the Shawnee Coal Co.

Ex-Rep. George M. Grant (D Ala. 1938-65) registered for the National Forest Products Assn. and the Thailand Ministry of Industry.

Ex-Rep. Burr P. Harrison (D Va. 1946-63) registered for Savage Arms and other gunsight firms.

Ex-Rep. Victor A. Knox (R Mich. 1953-65) registered for the Committee for Automobile Excise Tax Repeal and the College of American Pathologists.

Ex-Rep. Albert Rains (D Ala. 1945-65) registered for Mayer, Friedlich, Spiess, Tierney, Brown & Platt and another firm interested in banking legislation.

Ex-Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts (D Ala. 1951-65) registered for the U.S. Plywood Corp., American Optometric Assn. and Animal Health Institute.

Ex-Officials Linked to Former Jobs

Among the 10 ex-Congressmen and 27 ex-federal officials who filed lobbyist registrations in 1965 were several who went to work for the very same pressure groups over which they, as federal officers, had once exercised jurisdiction:

Ex-Rep. Albert Rains (D Ala. 1945-65), a long-time member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, registered for Mayer, Friedlich, Spiess, Tierney, Brown & Platt and another law firm interested in banking bills.

Ex-Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts (D Ala. 1951-65), formerly third-ranking Democrat on the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, had among his lobbying clients the American Optometric Assn. and the Animal Health Assn., whose legislative interests involved bills normally handled by the Committee.

Ex-Rep. George M. Grant (D Ala. 1938-65), formerly third-ranking Democrat on the House Agriculture Committee and for 10 years chairman of its Forests Subcommittee, registered for the National Forest Products Assn. and also as a sugar lobbyist for the Thailand Government. The House Agriculture Committee handles sugar bills.

Ex-Rep. Victor A. Knox (R Mich. 1953-65) registered at $2,000 a month for the College of American Pathologists on the medical-care-for-the-aged bill, and also for the Committee for Automobile Excise Tax Repeal. Both issues were handled by the House Ways and Means Committee, on which Knox formerly served.

Ex-Rep. Clifford Davis (D Tenn. 1940-65), who registered for the Louisville Gas & Electric Co. and the Shawnee Coal Co., formerly was third-ranking Democrat on the House Public Works Committee. The Committee has jurisdiction over the authorization of federal hydroelectric power projects in the East, a subject of potential interest to both Davis' clients.

Ex-Sen. J.J. Hickey (D Wyo. 1961-62) registered for the Union Pacific Railroad on public land and mineral questions, a subject handled by the Senate Interior Committee, on which Hickey served when in Congress.

Ex-Rep. Burr P. Harrison (D Va. 1946-63) registered for the Savage Arms and other gunsight firms, and said he would receive $4,000 for lobbying against "anti-gun" bills under the jurisdiction of Harrison's old committee, House Ways and Means.

Robert L. Farrington, an Agriculture Department Solicitor and General Counsel (1954-59), registered as a sugar lobbyist for the Chinese (Taiwan) Government. The Agriculture Department administers the Sugar Act.

Frederick W. Ford, ex-member of the Federal Communications Commission (1957-64), registered for the National Community Television Assn., at expenses of $139 a day.

Everett Hutchinson, ex-member of the Interstate Commerce Commission (1955-65), registered for the National Assn. of Motor Bus Owners.

David A. Lindsay, ex-Treasury lawyer and General Counsel (1958-60) and brother of the New York City mayor-elect, registered for the ICI Financial Corp.

Robert D. McMillen, former assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture (1954-58), registered for the Corn Starch Industry Committee in connection with the omnibus farm bill of 1965.

The firm of ex-Rep. J.T. Rutherford (D Texas 1955-63) registered for the National Grain Producers, Handlers and Processors Assn. and the American College of Radiology.

Ex-Federal Officials. The following registered:

The law firm of Thurman Arnold (Assistant Attorney General, 1938-43; federal appeals court judge, 1943-45), Abe Fortas (held various federal jobs from 1933-46 including Under Secretary of Interior, 1942-46) and Paul A. Porter (various federal jobs from 1932-46 including administrator of the Office of Price Administration, 1946) registered for the American Tourist and Trade Assn., Council of Savings and Loan Financial Corps., Record Industry Assn. of America, National Council of American Importers Floor Covering Committee, and Margaret Lee Weil. (Note: Fortas later became a justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.)

Bernard L. Boutin (Administrator of the General Servides Administration, 1961-65) registered for the National Assn. of Homebuilders. (Note: Boutin later became Deputy Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity.)

Blue Carstenson (former Assistant to the Under Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, 1961) registered for the National Farmers Union.

The law firm of Oscar L. Chapman (former Secretary of Interior, 1949-53) registered for the Alaska Pipeline Co., Association de Comerciates en Licores de Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, and Strohmeyer and Arpe Co.

Marvin K. Collie (tax adviser to the Government in 1957, 1963) registered for the Arthur Anderson Co.

The law firm of Donald S. Dawson (Administrative Assistant to President Truman, 1948-53) registered for the Air Transport Assn., American Nursing Home Assn., D.C. Transit and Peoples Life Insurance Co. and related insurance firms.

Robert L. Farrington (ex-Solicitor and General Counsel of the Agriculture Department, 1954-59) registered for the Chinese Government (Taiwan) Procurement and Services Mission.

The law firm of Myer Feldman (former Presidential Assistant to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, 1961-65) registered for the Pacific Health Plan and the Upper Ohio Valley Assn.

Frederick W. Ford (former member of the Federal Communications Commission, 1957-64) registered for the National Community Television Assn.

Joseph B. Friedman (former Treasury attorney, 1935-45, and Assistant General Counsel, 1945-48) registered for M. Golodetz and Co., a firm interested in unblocking certain Cuban assets in the U.S. for the benefit of U.S. citizens.

Milton S. Gwirtzman (former legislative assistant, 1961-62, to ex-Sen. Benjamin A. Smith, D Mass. 1960-62) registered for HRH Construction Co.

The law firm of Fowler Hamilton (Administrator of the Agency for International Development, 1961-62) registered for the Coconut Oil Consumers Committee, Colonial Sugar Refining Co., and the Oil Shale Corp.

Laurance G. Henderson (Senate Select Small Business Committee staff director, 1952-54) registered for the same groups as ex-Rep. Rains (above).

H. Struve Hensel (held various Navy and Defense Department jobs from 1944-55, including Assistant Secretary of Defense, 1954-55) registered for C.H. Stuelcken Sohn, a German shipyard.

Clinton M. Hester (held various jobs in the Justice and Treasury Departments and Civil Aeronautics Administration, 1927-40) registered for Savage Arms and other gunsight firms.

Everett Hutchinson (member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, 1955-65) registered for the National Assn. of Motor Bus Owners.

Nils A. Lennartson (held Air Force, Commerce and Treasury Department positions, 1948-61, and was Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, 1961-65) registered for the Railway Progress Institute.

David A. Lindsay (brother of the Congressman John Lindsay and a Treasury official, 1958-60, and general counsel, 1960) registered for ICI Financial Corp.

E. Perkins McGuire (Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, 1954-56, and Assistant Secretary, 1956-61) registered for C.H. Stuelcken Sohn.

Robert D. McMillen (assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture, 1954-58) registered for the Corn Starch Industry Committee.

The law firm of Richard M. Nixon (Vice President of the United States, 1953-61) registered for the Talisman Sugar Corp., although Nixon personally was said to have no involvement in the case.

John A. O'Donnell (Philippine War Damage Commission member, 1947-51) registered for the Philippine Sugar Assn. and the National Federation of Sugarcane Planters of the Philippines.

The law firm of Kenneth C. Royall (Secretary of the Army, 1947-49) and William P. Rogers (Attorney General, 1957-61) registered for the American Insurance Assn. and the Publishing Companies Ad Hoc Committee.

Rein J. Vander Zee (Assistant Secretary to the Senate Democratic Majority, 1962-64) registered for the law firm of O'Connor, Green, Thomas and Walters on behalf of the Dirksen reapportionment amendment.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- CQ learned in 1965 that former Postmaster General J. Edward Day (1961-63), after leaving his federal job, had joined the law firm of Sidley, Austin, Burgess and Smith as a senior partner. The firm registered in 1963 as a lobbyist for the Inland Steel Co. Day told CQ that as senior partner, he helped represent Inland on Indiana Dunes legislation. (See p. 768)

Lobby Law Actions

Registration Enforcement. The Senate Rules and Administration Committee June 30 reported a bill (S 2233 -- S Rept 419) to tighten up administration of the 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act by placing administration in the hands of the Comptroller General of the United States and empowering him to check lobby reports for accuracy and to determine possible violations of the law. No such checking by any agency was authorized by the 1946 law. S 2233 was not debated by the Senate. (See p. 1512)

Lobbying Deductions. The Internal Revenue Service April 20 published its final regulations on business deductions for the costs of lobbying expenses. Tax deductions for lobbying costs were first authorized by Congress in the Revenue Act of 1962 (1962 Almanac p. 478), but it was not until Aug. 4, 1964, that the IRS issued a proposed regulation interpreting the provisions of the 1962 Act. After receiving comments from interested organizations and a hearing in November 1964, the IRS revised the proposed regulation and issued its final version.

In general, the 1962 Act and the April 20 regulations permitted deduction by a business of three types of costs incurred for lobbying and related activities:

(1) The cost of making presentations to legislative bodies or their members on legislation of direct interest to the business involved.

(2) The cost of communicating information between a business and an organization to which it belonged (such as a trade group or chamber of commerce) in connection with legislation of direct interest to the business involved or to any member of the organization.

(3) The cost of portions of dues paid by a business to an organization (such as a chamber of commerce) and used by the organization for either of the above activities.

The April 20 IRS regulation provided the following explanation of some of the terms and concepts used:

YEARS COVERED -- The new lobbying deduction rules applied only for taxable years beginning on or after Jan. 1, 1963. For years before that, no deductions were permitted.

DEFINITIONS -- The regulations made clear that the costs of making presentations to legislative bodies could be deducted only when they involved direct appearances before and contacts with legislative groups and individual legislators, and only then if in connection with legislation which was truly of direct interest to the business involved. Legislative bodies, in this connection, included Congress, state and territorial legislatures, local government legislatures and the committees and individual members of any such bodies. A legislative contact or presentation meant the act of presenting testimony, preparing testimony, appearing before a committee, sending letters and other communications, making statements or contacting individual legislators. It did not include a "grassroots" legislative campaign aimed at influencing the general public on legislation through advertising, distribution of pamphlets or other material to the public or the making of speeches to the public. The costs of such grassroots campaigns were not deductible.

Legislation of direct interest meant a bill, resolution or any oral or written proposal "of such a nature that it will, or may reasonably be expected to, affect the trade or business of the taxpayer." The IRS said the effect had to be direct, and not remote or speculative or general. The IRS cited as examples of legislation of direct interest: any legislation that would affect a business's taxes, operating costs, earnings, administrative burdens, including Social Security payroll taxes and sales taxes. But it said legislation relating, for example, to general economy in government or to Presidential succession would be considered remote and speculative and the costs of lobbying on such legislation would not be deductible. The IRS said legislation affecting sources of capital of a corporation would be considered of direct interest, as would legislation which affected a business's competitor in such a way as to change the competitive situation, and legislation to improve the school system of a community, "because the improved school system is likely to make the community more attractive to prospective employees of such employers."

OTHER -- Other portions of the regulation made clear that expert witnesses could deduct their cost of testimony under certain conditions and that the expenditures of a business for grassroots lobbying campaigns on legislation and for political campaigns or for influencing the public on referendums were not deductible.

-- PL 89-291); heart-cancer-stroke regional medical program bill (S 596 -- PL 89-239); Health Professions Educational Assistance Amendments (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290).

American Library Assn. (Represents 30,000 librarians, student librarians, libraries as institutions, and citizens interested in promoting libraries.) Said a substantial amount of legislation of major benefit to libraries had been enacted with Association support. The two most important new programs were the federal-aid-for-textbook provisions in Title II of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 2362 -- PL 89-10); and the federal aid provisions for development of college libraries, and for library training and research, in Title II of the Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329). Also supported the Medical Library Assistance Act (S 597 -- PL 89-291), and Sections 12 and 13 of the bill to create a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities (S 1483 -- PL 89-209); the Association said Sections 12 and 13 might be used to provide federal aid for expanding library services and training in connection with the teaching of the arts and humanities, although the precise applicability to libraries had not yet been determined. In connection with bills (HR 4347 -- S 1006, which were not enacted), proposing revision of copyright laws, favored inclusion of "fair use" guarantees that would allow for reproduction in whole or in part of out-of-print and hard-to-get books.

American Medical Assn. (Represents 206,000 physicians.) Strongly opposed the Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) program and worked intensively although unsuccessfully to defeat it. Did succeed in getting the bill amended to eliminate payments for the services of specialists as part of the "basic" Medicare package; instead, payments for specialists were made part of the supplementary, voluntary plan. Also opposed the Administration's initial heart-cancer-stroke regional medical center bill (S 596 -- PL 89-329) and succeeded in having inserted a substantial number of amendments favored by the AMA (such as elimination of authority for wholly new construction or for treatment of patients except as incidental to research); said that while the amendments had made the bill less objectionable, the AMA still opposed the final version. Approved the construction grant provisions of the Health Professions Educational Assistance Act (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290) but opposed the scholarship, student loan and operating aid provisions. Opposed the mental health staffing provisions enacted in HR 2985 (PL 89-105). Supported the Medical Library Assistance Act (S 597 -- PL 89-291). Supported many of the major provisions of the following measures, in some cases with proposed amendments: Health Research Facilities Act Amendments (HR 2984 -- PL 89-115); Community Health Services Extension Amendments (S 510 -- PL 89-109); a bill expanding federal controls over depressant and stimulant drugs (HR 2 -- PL 89-74); and the air pollution bill (S 306 -- PL 89-272). The AMA also supported HR 10, to liberalize the provisions of a 1962 law that permitted self-employed persons to defer tax payments on portions of their income set aside in retirement plans; HR was not enacted by Congress in 1965.

American Nurses Assn. (Represents over 160,000 registered nurses.) "Active" in support of Medicare (HR 6675 -- PL 89-97) and "delighted" with its enactment. Pleased with amendment of the Medical Library Assistance Act (S 597 -- PL 89-291) to include in the bill "allied sciences" (such as nursing). Supported the Health Professions Educational Assistance Act (HR 3141 -- PL 89-290) but opposed a provision of the final bill which permitted the U.S. Commissioner of Education directly to accredit nursing schools for the purpose of determining whether the schools should receive federal aid under the 1964 Nurse Training Act. Under existing law, the National League for Nurses, a professional group, had made accreditations for this purpose; it ordinarily did not accredit junior colleges. The American Nurses Assn. preferred to maintain this arrangement. The House version of HR 3141, however, had proposed to let state and regional agencies accredit nursing schools for the purpose of determining their eligibility for federal aid under the 1964 Nurse Training Act -- a provision designed to ultimately bring junior colleges under the aid provisions of the 1964 program. The American Nurses Assn. opposed the House provision and succeeded in getting it watered down in the final bill, which provided that either the National League for Nurses or the Commissioner of Education -- but not state and regional agencies -- could make the accreditations. The Association considered this provision better than the House version, but still objectionable. However, the Association said it was pleased that the Department of HEW, in subsequently issuing regulations to carry out the provision, had indicated it would use the accreditation authority of the Commissioner primarily to decide appeals against accreditation decisions by the National League for Nurses, rather than to make initial accreditations of its own. The Association was also pleased that the Manpower Act (S 974 -- PL 89-15) included refresher courses for nurses. Supported the mental health staffing bill (HR 2985 -- PL 89-105). Was pleased that Labor Department regulations on the immigration reform bill (HR 2580 -- PL 89-236) required persons entering the U.S. to work in nursing to meet the professional qualifications normally required of nurses in the state in which the entrant proposed to work. Backed HR 8158 (not enacted), to authorize male nurses to hold commissions in the armed forces; and favored inclusion in the minimum wage bills (HR 8259, HR 10518, not enacted) of provisions putting hospital workers under the minimum wage law.

National Education Assn. (Represents about 900,000 teachers and school administrators.) Considered 1965 a "very fine session." Strongly supported the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329). Also supported bills to provide disaster aid to schools (HR 9022 -- PL 89-313); increase authorizations for Indian adult vocational education (HR 4478 -- PL 89-14); expand and extend the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 (S 974 -- PL 89-15); establish a National Technical Institute for the Deaf (HR 7031 -- PL 89-36); extend the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act of 1961 (HR 8131 -- PL 89-69); establish the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities (S 1483 -- PL 89-209); and establish a system of loan insurance and a supplementary system of direct loans to assist students attending post-secondary business, trade, technical and other vocational schools (HR 7743 -- PL 89-287). Also supported the following proposals which were not enacted in 1965: "cold war GI bill" (S 9, eventually passed in 1966); increases in overseas teacher salaries (HR 6845, eventually passed in 1966); the granting of a clear right to teachers, in any revision of copyright laws, to copy and record educational materials needed for non-profit educational use (no copyright bill enacted in 1965).

$10 MILLION ALLOTTED FOR INVESTIGATIONS

During its first session, the 89th Congress authorized 33 committees to spend $10,265,250 on investigations. It was the largest amount provided by any Congress in a single year, as has been true of every first-session authorization since Congressional Quarterly began making reports on investigation funds in 1952.

The 1965 figure was 9 percent larger than the $9,596,783 provided by the first session of the 88th Congress in 1963 and more than three times larger than the $3,210,050 "record total" provided by the first session of the 83rd Congress a decade earlier.

In 1965, the Senate provided $5,233,000 -- nearly $1 million more than in 1963 -- for investigations by 17 of its standing, select and special committees. (For committee figures, see table on next page.)

House committees received $4,882,250 -- a slight reduction from 1961 and 1963 figures, partially accounted for by the reduced number of special House committees. (For definitions of standing, special and select committees, see Glossary, p. 21, 22)

Senate Investigations. As in past years, by far the largest appropriation, $2,302,800, went to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which supports 14 subcommittees. Its main investigations included: extensive hearings by the Administrative Practice and Procedure Subcommittee on invasion of privacy, primarily the seizure of first-class mail by the Internal Revenue Service and the use of electronic "eavesdropping equipment" by Government and industry (see story p. 1526); a related inquiry by the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee on psychological testing by Government agencies and the possible violation of the employee's right to privacy; and hearings by the Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee on the merging of diverse companies into monopolistic holding corporations.

The Senate Government Operations Committee received $863,500 -- the second largest authorization. Foremost among its investigations were a Permanent Investigations Subcommittee study of the nation's federally insured banking system, including the purchase of banks by unscrupulous persons and the recent rise in bank failures (see story p. 1533); and an Executive Reorganization Subcommittee study of the Federal Government's role in promoting traffic safety.

The Senate Rules and Administration Committee completed the second phase of its investigation of the business affairs of former Secretary to the Senate Majority Robert G. (Bobby) Baker and June 30 issued a "supplemental report" (S Rept 388). The Committee spent $79,737 on the second phase of hearings (Oct. 1, 1964 -- March 2, 1965) making a total investigation expenditure, since October 1963, of $187,086. (1964 Almanac p. 942; this volume, p. 1512.)

House Investigations. The largest House authorization, $650,000, went to the House Government Operations Committee, which also had a large number of active subcommittees. Its major investigations included a "special inquiry" into federal and private invasion of privacy, particularly the use of personality tests (see story p. 1526); and additional hearings by the Foreign Operations and Government Information Subcommittee on federal use of lie detectors, or polygraphs, in interrogation procedures. (For 1964 hearings, see 1964 Almanac p. 996)

Other important House investigations included hearings by the Banking and Currency Domestic Finance Subcommittee on the nation's federally insured banking system, covering problems similar to those investigated by the Senate Government Operations Permanent Investigations Subcommittee; additional hearings by the Public Works Special Subcommittee on the Federal-Aid Highway Program on highway construction practices (1962 Almanac p. 985, 1963 Almanac p. 1087); hearings by the Un-American Activities Committee on the Ku Klux Klan (see story p. 1517); and an Armed Services Subcommittee study of the proposed Defense Department plan to merge the Army Reserve with the Army National Guard. (See story p. 692) The Senate Armed Services Preparedness Investigating Subcommittee also held hearings on the proposed reserve component merger.

ACTION ON FUNDS

Investigation funds for House and Senate Committees, except the Appropriations Committees, are provided by special resolutions which designate a specific amount for studies in a certain field. The amount authorized by either chamber is sometimes exactly the sum requested by the committee; on other occasions it is altered upon recommendations of the House Administration and Senate Rules and Administration Committees.

In 1965, the House Administration Committee cut total committee requests by more than $2.2 million, reducing House Banking and Currency requests by $1,178,500 and the House Government Operations Committee figure by $170,000. As had been recent custom, investigation funds for the House Un-American Activities Committee were opposed on the floor of the House but adopted by a large majority on roll-call votes. (See story p. 1517)

Senate committees have two other possible sources of investigation funds not included in current CQ tabulations: In each Congress, all Senate standing committees and the Select Small Business Committee are allotted a minimum $10,000 for "routine expenditures" under section 134(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Part of this sum may contribute to investigative work, particularly in small committees such as Senate Agriculture, Finance and District of Columbia which did not request special funds in 1965.

Some Senate committees also have available for part of a Congress funds authorized but unspent during the preceding Congress. House funds cannot carry over from one Congress to the next.

The Appropriations Committees and House-Senate joint committees (except the Joint Committee on Organization of Congress, created for a special study) are funded on a fiscal year basis and are not listed on the chart on p. 1505. For fiscal 1966 the Senate Appropriations Committee was allotted $392,000 and its House counterpart, $700,000. Six joint committees were authorized to spend $1,236,265. The largest grants went to the Internal Revenue Taxation Committee ($390,000), the Joint Economic Committee ($360,000) and Atomic Energy ($347,000).

MAJOR INVESTIGATIONS UNDERTAKEN BY 89th CONGRESS

Following is a list of major investigations undertaken by Congressional committees from the beginning of the 89th Congress Jan. 4, 1965, through Dec. 31, 1965.

Each inquiry is listed by subject under the committee and subcommittee that conducted it, with the beginning and concluding dates of hearings.

Hearings on bills and resolutions are excluded. Only investigations in which committee hearings were held are listed. Staff studies that did not reach the hearings stage are omitted.

No investigations are listed for the Senate and House Appropriations Committees, whose staffs conduct continuing studies on appropriations, operations of executive departments and disposition of Government funds.

Senate Committees

AERONAUTICAL AND SPACE SCIENCES

Chairman Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.)

Space launch vehicles. Jan. 26, 27, 1965.

Plans for space programs to follow program Apollo. Aug. 23-25, 1965

Preparedness Investigating Subcommittee

Chairman John Stennis (D Miss.)

Proposed transfer of Army Reserve units to Army National Guard. Began Mar. 1, 1965. Concluded Oct. 8, 1965.

Military situation in Viet Nam. Began Feb. 5, 1965. Concluded July 22, 1965.

Readiness of Army equipment and materiel. Began May 13, 1965. Concluded July 27, 1965.

Loss of planes at Bienhoa Airbase, South Viet Nam. June 8, 1965.

Briefing by CIA Director William F. Raborn. Oct. 18, 1965.

Central Intelligence Subcommittee

Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.)

Briefings by CIA officers on current programs. Began Jan. 11, 1965. Concluded Aug. 6, 1965.

What's an Investigation?

For purposes of this survey, Congressional Quarterly defined "investigation" as an inquiry by any Congressional committee or subcommittee that used investigative procedures (examining records, summoning and questioning witnesses) for one or more of the following reasons:

- Fact-finding for possible special and remedial legislation.
- Fulfillment of Congress' function as "watchdog" over operation of the Government and its programs.
- Informing the public.
- Resolving questions concerning membership or procedure, such as conduct of elections or fitness of Members of Congress.

Among committee activities not included in the definition: inquiries conducted by committee staff members without participation by Members of Congress in formal hearings; routine hearings; and action on bills and resolutions.

Special Subcommittee

(of the Preparedness Subcommittee)

Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.)

Joint hearings with the Joint Atomic Energy Military Applications Subcommittee on implementation of nuclear test ban treaty safeguards. Began Aug. 16, 1965. Concluded Sept. 2, 1965.

BANKING AND CURRENCY

International Finance Subcommittee

Chairman Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine)

U.S. balance-of-payments deficit. Began Mar. 9, 1965. Concluded Aug. 18, 1965.

COMMERCE

Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.)

Export controls on black walnut logs. March 16 and 31, Oct. 15, 1965.

Administration of PL 88-108, concerning railroad work-rules disputes. Began Aug. 2, 1965. Concluded Aug. 28, 1965.

Barriers to U.S. amateur athletic competition. Began Aug. 16, 1965. Concluded Aug. 27, 1965.

Aviation Subcommittee

Chairman A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.)

Helicopter support programs. March 8-11, 1965.

Adequacy of trunkline air service to medium-sized intermediate cities. July 6-9, 1965.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Public Health, Education, Welfare and Safety Subcommittee

SECOND REPORT ON BOBBY BAKER ISSUED, INDICTMENT FILED

On Jan. 5, 1966, former Secretary to the Senate Majority Robert G. (Bobby) Baker was indicted by a federal grand jury on nine counts, including fraud, conspiracy and income-tax evasion. The indictment came 27 months after Baker had resigned his Senate post rather than submit to questioning about his non-official activities and possible conflicts of interest arising from them.

In March 1965, the Senate Rules and Administration Committee ended its 16-month, two-part investigation of Baker's financial activities. The probe had unfolded a story of the rapid growth of a personal fortune, worth more than $2 million on paper, built largely on credit from persons who were impressed with Baker's aura of influence. It had initially been ended in March 1964, over the protests of Committee Republicans, and the Committee issued a report in June 1964. In the report the Democratic majority found Baker guilty of "gross improprieties" and called for a Congressional financial disclosure rule. The Republican minority objected that the investigation was incomplete and a "whitewash."

On Sept. 1, 1964, Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.), in a Senate speech, said that an insurance man who figured prominently in the earlier investigation had charged that Baker and Matthew H. McCloskey had conspired to illegally contribute $25,000 to the 1960 Democratic campaign when McCloskey was prime contractor for the District of Columbia Stadium. The disclosure caused the Senate to reopen the Rules Committee investigation. (1964 Almanac p. 942)

In June 1965 the Rules Committee issued a report on the second phase of the investigation. The majority views covered the allegations involving the D.C. Stadium contract and five other major issues investigated during both phases of the probe. The majority in effect found Baker and McCloskey "not guilty" of the allegations involving the stadium contract. Most of the statements on the other issues tended to back up conclusions in the first report. The minority views were sharply critical of the majority's conclusions in the stadium case and repeated earlier objections to the majority's handling of the investigation.

Both the majority and minority Committee views in the 1964 and 1965 reports called for rules requiring financial statements by Congressmen and employees. Such a rule had been turned down by the Senate in 1964. In 1965, proposals to that effect were never called up on the floor. The Senate in July did appoint members to the Senate Select Committee on Standards and Conduct, which it had established 12 months before, but when the Committee met it postponed formal operations until 1966.

Although the Baker case failed to cause Congress to tighten controls over financial activities of Members and employees, President Johnson in 1965 did take steps to clarify the conflict-of-interest question for federal employees. In May he issued an executive order calling for conflict-of-interest codes for federal agencies and requiring annual financial reports from Presidential employees in grades 16 and above.

Second Report on Baker

The Rules and Administration Committee June 30 issued a "supplemental report" (S Rept 388) covering the second phase of the Baker investigation. The report covered six major issues examined during the two Baker probes and touched briefly on other allegations. (For hearings and details of the first report, see 1964 Almanac p. 942)

The majority views were signed by the six Democrats on the Committee -- Chairman B. Everett Jordan (N.C.), Howard W. Cannon (Nev.), Robert C. Byrd (W.Va.), Carl Hayden (Ariz.), Joseph S. Clark (Pa.) and Claiborne Pell (R.I.). The majority drew no new conclusions about Baker beyond the statement in the first report that he had been guilty of many "gross improprieties," and most of the statements on the specific cases that were reinvestigated tended to back up earlier conclusions. However, the majority called for strict new rules affecting financial disclosure and outside employment by Congressmen and employees.

Lengthy minority views were signed by the Committee's three Republican members -- Carl T. Curtis (Neb.), John Sherman Cooper (Ky.) and Hugh Scott (Pa.). The minority agreed with the majority's specific recommendations but repeated earlier charges that the investigation had been a "whitewash," objected to some specific conclusions and protested the majority's "continuing effort to discredit witnesses...whose testimony extended the investigation into new fields."

MAJORITY VIEWS

Highlights of the majority views:

D.C. Stadium Contract. The report said the Committee could find "no evidence to support" the suggestion by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) of impropriety in the awarding of the District of Columbia Stadium contract to the Philadelphia construction company of former treasurer of the Democratic National Committee and former U.S. Ambassador to Ireland, Matthew H. McCloskey. It also concluded that the $3 million increase in the stadium's final cost over McCloskey & Co.'s original bid was a result of developments which "were either unforeseeable or undetermined at the time the contract was let." (For other statements on Williams' role in the investigation, see below)

In addition, the Committee found "no impropriety" in an overpayment on the premium for the stadium performance bond, which was written by Silver Spring, Md., insuranceman Don B. Reynolds, a former associate of Baker.

Reynolds had testified in January and December 1964 that the actual cost of the premium was $73,631.28, including his commission, but that he had been directed to bill McCloskey for $109,205.60 on the understanding that $25,000 of the overpayment would be given to Baker to be used for Democratic party campaign contributions in 1960. In December testimony, however, McCloskey denied Reynolds' charge, stating that the overpayment resulted from a billing "goof."

The Committee accepted McCloskey's version of the transaction, noting that his explanation "was as candid and convincing as Reynolds' was devious and inconsistent." It noted that the total amount of the overpayment ($36,000) was almost exactly the amount of general liability insurance which McCloskey & Co. was required to hold, and that probably the two insurance payments had accidentally been lumped together.

The credibility of Reynolds' statement "was destroyed, and out of his own mouth," the Committee continued. There was an "irreconcilable inconsistency of Reynolds' various statements as to the chronology of key episodes in the story," and no proof that Baker had received the overpayment. The Committee added, "One could logically surmise that it was...(Reynolds') desire to keep the windfall (the overpayment) which prompted him to set out on this tortuous path of deception."

However, the Committee said, "This explanation leaves residual questions in the public realm...It is clear that Reynolds owed his function as broker of record (on the performance bond) to Baker's friendship with McCloskey. Baker's solicitation of the bond and insurance business from a public contractor for himself and Reynolds, and receipt of any part of the profit, constitutes at least an impropriety on his part as a public servant."

Johnson Life Insurance, Hi-Fi Set. With reference to Reynolds' charges that following his 1957 and 1961 sales of $200,000 in life insurance to then Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), he was (1) induced by Walter W. Jenkins, former assistant to Mr. Johnson, to purchase advertising time on an Austin, Texas, radio-television station owned by the Johnson family and (2) advised by Baker to give Mr. Johnson a hi-fi set, the Committee said it was "not satisfied that the evidence on this subject furnished any proof of impropriety." The purchase of advertising time, the Committee said, "follows business conduct considered legitimate by many reputable American businessmen." As for Baker, who had arranged Reynolds' insurance sale to Sen. Johnson, the Committee said, "He used the influence of his public office to feather his own nest, and hence acted unethically -- even though the subject matter did not touch the 'public' interest." It said the gift of a hi-fi set, at Baker's instruction, was part of Baker's fee for helping Reynolds get the business.

Sweet Water Development Co. The Committee concluded that "there was no evidence suggesting any fraud" on the part of the Sweet Water Development Co., which was owned by the Murchison family of Dallas, Texas, in performing desalination contracts for the Office of Saline Water. As to a 1961 $2,500 payment to Baker by the New York law firm of Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) for referring Sweet Water to them, the Committee said Celler was not to be "criticized" for the payment of a forwarding fee since Celler was "right to rely on Baker's representation" that he was, in fact, employed by Sweet Water. However, it said, testimony left "the distinct possibility that Baker falsely represented his status to Mr. Celler."

Freight-Forwarder Bill. The Committee said lawyer Myron Weiner's claim that a $5,000 payment to Baker in 1961, two days after passage of freight-forwarder legislation on which Weiner lobbied (PL 87-254), was for legal services to be rendered, "was immediately called in question by his further admission that such services had never been made use of." Weiner had been paid $50,000 by an ad hoc committee of ocean-freight forwarders to work for passage of PL 87-254, and the Committee concluded that the payment was made for Baker's help in getting the law passed. "This case furnishes evidence of the most flagrant of all Baker's activities in the use of his office and the prestige of his position for his personal financial profit...and justifies careful consideration looking to an indictment for violation of the conflict-of-interest statutes," the Committee said. "The boldness with which Baker and Weiner acted also illustrates how unrestrained and unpoliced wrongdoing can grow and flourish in places where high standards of morality and ethics should prevail." The report noted that Weiner, who was paid to expedite passage of the legislation, was not registered as a lobbyist.

Blue Lake Manor Retirement Home. Suspicion of a link between Baker and Maywood Boggs, Washington representative of the Boilermakers' Union, in securing in 1962 a $2.5-million FHA loan for a union retirement home in Mississippi, the Committee said, rested solely on Boggs' sale to Baker, for only $4,600, of stock worth $31,000. The Committee said FHA files showed no evidence of Boggs or Baker having played any role in the granting of the loan.

Redwood National Bank. "Lack of evidence," the Committee said, prevented it from establishing whether Baker actually received the proceeds from a $5,000 check following the 1962 granting of a federal charter to the Redwood National Bank of San Rafael, Calif. Although he invoked the 5th Amendment protection against self-incrimination when he appeared before the Committee, Wayne L. Bromley, who had lobbied for the bank charter, earlier had told investigators that the check was merely delivered to Baker so that Baker could cash it for him. (For later developments in the Redwood Bank case, see Baker Indictment, p. 1515.)

Other Matters. The Committee said that it did not take evidence from anyone mentioned in the "so-called Rometsch file" since the "activities" of such persons did not come within the purview of the Committee's investigation.

The "Rometsch file" referred to an FBI investigation of "party girl" activities involving Ellyn Rometsch, wife of a German soldier stationed in Washington; other "party-girls"; and, allegedly, Members and employees of Congress and Executive Branch officials. Mrs. Rometsch and her husband were recalled to Germany in 1963 as a result of the investigation. A summary of the FBI report, released by the Committee June 9, said the West German government had investigated Mrs. Rometsch and concluded that "no security violations occurred" in her activities.

In addition, the Committee said it turned over to the Justice Department all information it had concerning accusations that the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. solicited campaign contributions from its executives, allowing them to recoup these from their expense accounts.

Williams Role. The majority report said, of the revelation by Williams that Reynolds claimed that McCloskey had made a deliberate overpayment to him for the performance bond on the D.C. Stadium contract, "Sen. Williams did not report this development to the Committee or its chairman, as he had reported much other helpful information, as soon as it came to his attention. If this had been done, the Committee would have made its investigation... as it had done throughout" the Baker probe. Williams' revelation came shortly before the 1964 general election and was the cause of the re-opening of the Baker probe.

Williams May 26 charged that a draft version of the majority report challenged his honesty by implying that he had deliberately withheld information from the Committee. He said that the draft report, which had been revealed to the press, was "a diabolically clever plan" to discredit him and influence the federal grand jury investigating Baker. He stated, "The decision has been made by the Great Society hierarchy that John Williams must be stopped. They are determined to save Bobby Baker from prosecution at all cost -- and divert attention -- by launching an attack on me."

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Committee said that the "absence of a rule of conduct or code of ethics has created an atmosphere in which Members, officers and employees of the Senate have been forced to grope their way through the myriad complexities of government dependent solely upon individual conscience as a guide." To provide guidelines "which will assist public officials in avoiding breaches of ethics or conflicts of interest," the Committee recommended that the Senate:

- Adopt a rule (S Res 123 -- S Rept 410) requiring each Senate Member, officer and employee paid over $10,000 a year to list annually with the Comptroller General all corporations, companies, firms or other business enterprises with which they were employed or in which they held financial interests. The reports would be kept strictly confidential. A similar requirement was made of Executive Branch employees by executive order of the President May 10. (See p. 1515)
- Adopt a rule (S Res 122 -- S Rept 409) requiring that no Senate officer or employee could engage in outside employment unless "such activity is not inconsistent with the conscientious performance of his official duties" and he reported the activity to the Senator charged with his supervision.
- Enact legislation (S 2233 -- S Rept 419) placing administration of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act under the Comptroller General, who would have the authority to prescribe methods for the filing of reports, to make available for public inspection all reports and to report violations of the Act to the appropriate federal agencies.

Although the bills were reported June 30, none received floor action in 1965.

In addition, the Committee recommended that a Select Committee on Standards and Conduct, which was created in 1964 following the Senate's failure to adopt a financial disclosure rule, be "activated forthwith." (See below)

MINORITY, OTHER VIEWS

Renewing their charges that the Baker probe was a "whitewash" controlled by the Committee's Democratic members, the three minority members said: "This whole investigation has been one marked by a refusal to investigate, by attempts to cover up, and by a failure of the majority to inform the minority of all that had been turned in to the Committee, and foot dragging generally." They repeated the charge made in their July 1964 report that "the majority at no time adhered to the rule which provided for the calling of witnesses with relevant information as requested by the minority."

The minority was particularly critical of the majority's conclusions concerning "the McCloskey affair." It said, "All of the evidence indicates that the transaction contained wrongful, irregular, and fraudulent aspects which were in violation of law," and concluded that the majority's view that "no impropriety" was committed was "contrary to all the facts."

The minority said that the answers submitted in 1965 by Walter Jenkins to written questions put by the Committee "clearly" indicated that an affidavit by Jenkins in 1963, denying Reynolds' allegation that he had been pressured into buying advertising from the Johnson television station, "did not contain a full and correct statement of the facts." They said that Jenkins should have been required to submit to cross-examination under oath. (Jenkins was not asked to appear for cross-examination because of doctors' statements that it could be dangerous to his health. See 1964 Almanac p. 968.)

The minority also criticized the majority for failing to pursue "the moral issues," including the possibility that Baker and others used call-girls to promote their business activities and influence Government decisions.

The minority also observed, "A disturbing aspect of the Baker investigation was the continuing effort to discredit witnesses who were willing to testify before the Committee and whose testimony extended the investigation into new fields. This was the case with respect to Don B. Reynolds...As contrasted with the treatment of other witnesses the practice of discrediting the testimony of Reynolds is striking."

The minority concluded their views with "an unqualified vote of thanks to Senator John Williams for his untiring efforts in furthering the progress of this investigation." (Williams was not a member of the Committee.)

Recommendations. The minority endorsed the Committee's recommendations, but proposed that legislation also be enacted to prohibit: (1) all Congressional officers and employees from handling, soliciting or distributing political funds and (2) Members of Congress and officers and employees from soliciting or receiving funds, for any reason, from persons having an interest in legislation or matters pending before federal agencies.

Other Views. Supplemental views were filed by Pell, Clark and Cooper. Pell said he hoped the Select Committee on Standards and Conduct would approve his proposal that all Senators who were lawyers list the clients of their firms with the Comptroller General. He also urged the Committee to make public the secret testimony taken during the investigation.

Clark said the Committee's recommendations for remedial action "do not go far enough." Clark said he would offer on the Senate floor, as amendments to the Committee's proposals, a resolution incorporating a more stringent financial disclosure rule along the lines of that proposed by him in 1964 and a resolution requiring that financial reports to the Comptroller General be available for public inspection. (1964 Almanac p. 970)

Cooper recommended public disclosure of nongovernmental activities by Senators and Senate employees.

Ethics Committee Named

The Senate Select Committee on Standards and Conduct, which the Rules Committee report sought to activate, had been established by the Senate in July 1964. It was authorized to receive and investigate complaints of unethical and illegal conduct by a Member or employee of the Senate, and to recommend disciplinary action if approved by four of its six members. The bipartisan Committee was approved on a 50-33 roll call as a substitute for more stringent resolutions (1) requiring disclosure of financial interests by Senators and high-ranking employees, and (2) giving the Rules Committee jurisdiction over infractions of all Senate rules and the power to recommend disciplinary action. (1964 Almanac p. 972)

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey July 9, 1965, announced that the Committee membership would be: Democrats John Stennis (Miss.), A.S. Mike Monroney (Okla.) and Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.), and Republicans Wallace F. Bennett (Utah), James B. Pearson (Kan.) and John Sherman Cooper (Ky.). Of these, only Stennis had opposed formation of the Committee in the 1964 Senate vote.

The Committee held its first meeting Oct. 21, picking Stennis, a former state judge, as chairman and Bennett as vice chairman. After the meeting, Stennis announced that the Committee had decided to postpone all formal operations until 1966. He said it was necessary to take time to "prepare a body of principles against which to measure any allegedly unethical conduct." Following his appointment to the Committee July 9, Stennis had said that although he had opposed its creation, "having been asked to serve, I'm going to do the best I can." He said that since the Committee would be covering "unplowed ground" and "uncharted courses," it should be "slow and cautious as it moves along." Stennis added that he "certainly wouldn't favor any over-regulation, ...because there's a lot of self-restraint and self-discipline among the Senators."

Baker Indictment

A federal grand jury in the District of Columbia Jan. 5, 1966, issued a nine-count indictment against Baker covering fraud, conspiracy and invasion of income taxes in 1962-64. The Justice Department said the indictments stemmed from a 15-month grand jury investigation and FBI and Internal Revenue Service investigations which began when Baker resigned his Senate post. If convicted on all counts, Baker would be liable to a maximum penalty of 48 years' imprisonment and $47,000 in fines.

Although the indictment did not go into charges in detail, it appeared that only one charge involved an issue which was publicly debated in the Rules Committee investigation (see below). The nine counts:

- Count one charged that in 1962 Baker filed a false 1961 tax return to evade taxes.
- Count two charged that in 1963 he filed a false 1962 tax return to evade taxes.
- Counts three and four charged him with fraudulently taking $50,000 from Stuart Davis, a Los Angeles savings and loan executive, and not reporting a large part of this income on his 1962 tax return.
- Counts five and six charged him with fraudulently taking $17,000 from John F. Marten, another Los Angeles savings and loan executive, and not reporting it on his 1962 tax return.
- Count seven charged him with fraudulently taking $33,000 from Sidney M. Taper, a third Los Angeles savings and loan official, transporting the funds in interstate commerce, and not reporting them on his 1962 tax return.
- Count eight charged Baker and Washington lawyer Wayne L. Bromley with disguising payments made by businessmen to Baker by making it appear that the money was paid to Bromley for legal services. It said a large part of money listed on Bromley's 1963 income tax return as payment from First Western Financial Corp., Las Vegas, and U.S. Freight Co., N.Y., was actually turned over to Baker. The specific charge in count eight was preparation of a false income tax return.
- Count nine charged conspiracy among Baker, Bromley and former Nevada Lt. Gov. Clifford A. Jones (1947-54) to defraud the Government in its tax collection function through the arrangement detailed in point eight. First Western Financial Corp. and U.S. Freight Co. were again mentioned in this count, as were Redwood National Bank, San Rafael, Calif., Harvey Aluminum Inc., Torrance, Calif., and International Marketing Associates Inc., Los Altos, Calif.

Jones was indicted for perjury in allegedly denying any role in the conspiracy, but Bromley was not indicted. Newspaper reports speculated that he had given the Government much of the information used in the indictments.

Of the various points mentioned in the indictment, only payment by Redwood National Bank to Baker through Bromley had been mentioned in the Rules Committee reports on the Baker investigation. The 1965 report said that "lack of evidence" kept the Committee from concluding whether such a payment had actually been made. (See above) Testimony before the Rules Committee in 1964 had alleged that Bromley had been hired to lobby for a federal charter for the Redwood Bank because he was a friend of Baker, and that three months after the charter was granted he split a $5,000 fee with Baker. (1964 Almanac p. 965)

Executive Branch Regulations

Although Congress in 1965 took no new steps toward clarifying the conflict-of-interest question, President Johnson May 10 issued an executive order which he said "codifies, clarifies and strengthens the standards of ethical conduct for Executive Branch personnel."

In a statement accompanying the order, Mr. Johnson said, "Although the overwhelming majority of federal employees experience absolutely no problem (of conflict of interest) there are some whose duties on occasion place them in difficult or awkward situations, and thus the order issued today lays down general guidelines and standards of conduct as clearly as possible....One of the main purposes of the executive order is to encourage individuals faced with questions involving subjective judgment to seek counsel and guidance. Thus, the chairman of the Civil Service Commission has been instructed to work with each department and agency head to establish within his organization designated individuals who can provide the guidance and interpretation necessary to relate general principles to specific situations."

In its main points, the order:

- Set forth standards governing the conduct of Executive Branch personnel in regard to acceptance of gifts, entertainment and favors; outside employment, teaching and writing; and use of Government information for private gain.
- Provided standards of conduct for temporary, part-time or intermittent Government advisers.
- Required Presidential appointees and other top federal officials to file confidential statements of outside financial interests with the Civil Service Commission.

The Civil Service Commission Oct. 1 issued an outline for conflict-of-interest codes to be drawn up by Executive Branch agencies. It required annual financial reports from Presidential appointees in Grades 16 and above and employees in lower grades whose jobs affected the economic interests of nonfederal firms.

BACKGROUND -- Shortly after President Kennedy took office in 1961 he asked Congress for legislation revising and consolidating conflict-of-interest laws, with particular emphasis on the Executive Branch. The legislation (HR 8140 -- PL 87-849) was enacted in 1962. It contained most of Mr. Kennedy's requests but did not include the authority for agency heads to adopt ethical codes and impose disciplinary measures that he had sought. (1961 Almanac p. 377, 1962 Almanac p. 385)

POSTAL JOBS CONTROVERSY

H Res 574 -- Reported adversely by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 1010) Sept. 16, 1965.

- Tabled (killed) by the House on a 185-181 roll-call vote Sept. 16. (See p. 1004)

A Republican attack on Post Office Department patronage was blunted in 1965 when the House voted by a narrow margin to kill a GOP-backed resolution (H Res 574) directing the Postmaster General to submit to the House the names of all persons assigned to temporary "antipoverty" postal jobs during the summer of 1965. Many of the jobs, it had earlier been reported and later substantiated, were not filled by the needy but by relatives and friends of Members of Congress and other officials.

H Res 574 was introduced by Rep. Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) Sept. 8 after the Post Office Department refused to give him a list of the names of 8,577 persons, mostly teen-agers and college students, filling the summer positions. Quie contended that many of those who received the jobs had prominent political connections and were "in no way educationally or economically disadvantaged" -- the criteria set by President Johnson May 23 when he proposed the jobs as part of the youth opportunity program of his "war on poverty." The President's plan was designed to provide summer Federal Government jobs paying $1.25 an hour for approximately 25,000 disadvantaged youths, aged 16 to 21. However, the postal positions, which represented about one-third of the total jobs offered and which required more skilled personnel, paid $2.29 an hour, the regular summer postal worker's wage.

Under prodding from Quie, other Republicans and members of the press, Postmaster General John A. Gronouski Sept. 13 conceded that 39 percent, or about 3,380, of the summer jobs had been filled with names submitted by Members of Congress, mostly Democrats, while the remaining 61 percent were given to applicants recommended by federal, state and local employment services or by local postmasters. Gronouski at the same time reversed an earlier decision and agreed to make the names public, but only through each of the approximately 34,000 individual post offices. Previously, postal authorities in communications to Quie had refused to disclose the names, citing a postal regulation prohibiting the divulging of "lists of employees, including their designations, salaries, or addresses...to any individual, commercial firm, or nonfederal organization." The regulation was intended to protect postal employees from mail or phone harassment by political candidates, advertisers or solicitors.

Members Recommending Relatives

Following House rejection of H Res 574, Quie obtained permission from the new Postmaster General, Lawrence F. O'Brien, who replaced Gronouski Nov. 3, to secure a list of the names through each of the 15 Post Office Department regional offices. On Jan. 20, 1966, Quie, having compiled a list, inserted the 8,577 names in the Congressional Record. The list included relatives of the following Members of Congress:

Sen. Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) and Reps. Charles C. Diggs Jr. (D Mich.), Richard Fulton (D Tenn.), Henry B. Gonzalez (D Texas), Clarence D. Long (D Md.), John E. Moss (D Calif.), Alec G. Olson (D Minn.), L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.) and Stanley R. Tupper (R Maine).

In a floor statement Jan 20, Quie said he did not place the blame for the summer postal job controversy on the youngsters or Members of Congress involved, since the Post Office Department, when it notified Members that the jobs were available, failed to mention that they were part of an antipoverty program. "If the blame is to be attached," Quie said, "it is to those officials of the Post Office Department to whom political patronage has become so much a part of life that they disregarded the criteria of the President...in order to seek political gain by the distribution of jobs intended for the disadvantaged."

House Action on H Res 574

COMMITTEE. The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee Sept. 16 reported H Res 574 (H Rept 1010) adversely. All Republican Committee members were absent when the action was taken. The report said the Committee opposed H Res 574 "because it would serve no useful purpose, since the Postmaster General has authorized postmasters throughout the country to make public, upon request, the information requested in the resolution."

FLOOR ACTION. The House Sept. 16 tabled (killed) H Res 574 by a 185-181 roll-call vote (R 0-118; ND 134-33; SD 51-30). The tabling motion was offered by James H. Morrison (D La.), acting Committee chairman. (For voting, see chart p. 1004)

During brief debate, Quie and H.R. Gross (R Iowa) complained that to compile a list of the names by writing each of the 34,000 individual post offices would be an almost impossible undertaking. Joined by Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) and Paul Findley (R Ill.), they also objected to the secrecy regulation under which the Department had initially refused to disclose the names, even through local post offices. They asserted that the American people, not to mention Members of Congress, should have a right to know whom the Federal Government hires.

John E. Moss (D Calif.), chairman of the House Government Operations Foreign Operations and Government Information Subcommittee, also objected to secrecy regulations but said resolutions such as H Res 574 would do little to advance the cause of freedom of information within the Government. He said the regulations had to be attacked directly.

Majority Whip Hale Boggs (D La.) questioned why Quie and others wanted to obtain the names. The motivation "must be politics," he said.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Oct. 13 -- In its report (H Rept 1162) on the fiscal 1966 general supplemental appropriations bill (HR 11588), the House Appropriations Committee concluded that the summer hiring program of the Post Office Department "did, in fact, serve a good and useful purpose," financially assisting many college students to continue their education. The report noted, however, that the Committee believed the Department did "unwisely introduce an element of politics into the program by requesting recommendations for employment from Members of Congress." The report suggested that if the program was to be continued in the future, the Department "should develop requirements early in the year, and handle the recruiting program strictly on a merit basis through normal civil service channels."
